A WOMAN'S DISCOVERY.

Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too of a lady in this country. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severe test, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz. Thus writes W. C. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby N. C.—Get a free trial bottle of A. M. RANDOLPH'S Druggist.

TOWN TALK.

Mrs. Cordelia Hueston is sick again.

E. H. Chamberlin of Detroit was in town Tuesday.

Mrs. G. W. Hudson is visiting her sister in Chicago.

L. W. Hutton had a slight stroke of paralysis last Friday.

Rev. S. Reed, of Saginaw called on his son here Tuesday.

The Gebhard sisters at the Baptist church next Wednesday evening.

John O. Knapp has been confined to the bed by sickness for the past week.

F. R. Beal is confined to the house again by one of his attacks of sickness.

Prof. G. W. Loomis and wife were in town a couple of days this week greeting old acquaintances.

Charles Woodman, Jr., of Boston, Mass., was the guest of his cousin, J. H. Woodman, this week.

C. M. Joslin spent part of last week at Flint. He is there again this week helping in their store there.

G. S. Vanzile was called to Charlotte Wednesday to attend the funeral services of a nephew.

Herman Leonard of Ovid N. Y. Spent Sunday with his sister Mrs. A. E. Brooks and other friends.

Mrs. A. G. Fosket, of Maple Rapids, and Mrs. Nora Bradney, of Medina Ohio, are guests of Mrs. E. R. Reed.

The organ company have secured the contract for a $4,000 organ for a Methodist church in Pittsburg, Pa. They have already commenced work on it.

The members of Allen M. Harmon post (G. A. R.) are arranging for a campaign for next week Friday evening. Further particulars will be announced later.

Names of pupils in Intermediate department neither tardy nor absent during the winter term: Clifton Covert, Ami Wilsey, Carl Yerkes, May Leadbeater.

We give considerable space this week to the business review of Northville. It is a valuable paper to send to your friends. We have plenty of copies for distribution.

The following pupils of the 1st Primary room have been neither absent nor tardy during the winter term of sixteen weeks: Grace Iden, Jessie Iden, Maud Buchner, Harold Beal, Charlie Brockert, Vern Hastings.

Already the benefits of having a market where butter and eggs are bought for cash is being felt here. Teichner & Co. will be public benefactors in this respect if in no other. We hope to see a good market built up here.

The business review of the place as written by Mr. Phillips appears elsewhere. He did not finish his work here but left unexpectedly and we do not know what promises he made to different parties but will do the best we can to fulfill his pledges. If any descriptions have been omitted who arranged with him it is because we do not know of them.

Mr. C. A. Hulbert, a young artist of Detroit who is talented and accomplished has opened a studio in the rooms lately occupied by J. V. Murdoch on center street where he will do artists work. He has organized a class here who are studying with a view of doing outside sketching work when the spring opens. He comes well recommended and as he has studied with eastern artists will undoubtedly do good work.

Gen. Buckland's old soldier horse, "Barney," died at his quarters in Fremont, (Ohio,) at the age of 37 years. "Barney" has a good soldier record, and in consideration of this has received every care possible since the war. He was presented to Gen. Buckland, by citizens of Fremont, when he went out in command of the seventy-second Ohio. At the battle of Shiloh, Sunday, April 6, "Barney" was shot through the neck. He was also in the siege of Corinth, and at Memphis. He was sent home and has been kept there ever since. Two years ago, when Gen. Sherman visited Fremont, he said, "Barney was the only living war horse he knew of." He was buried with honors of war, the Sons of Veterans firing a salute over the grave. Many old soldiers were present.

A number of citizens have joined in a request to have a public meeting called for Monday evening next at the Record office to take steps to appropriately observe April 30, in commemoration of its being the 100th anniversary of the inauguration of the first president. All are invited to attend. This day should be well observed here as well as elsewhere.

The Wayne county teacher's association last Friday p. m. and Saturday a. m. in the high school room. The attendance was small but the program was interesting. The papers were well received and many curious views were presented in the discussions which followed each paper. The discussion Saturday morning on "The Township-Unit System" was fine and should have been heard by every person interested in the advancement and better success of our district schools. The benefits of the system were well presented and gained quite a few converts to the township system. Friday night Mr. R. H. Pattengill, of the School Moderator, of Lansing, lectured on "The Interrogation Point." It was a good practical discourse which, though prepared more especially for teachers, interested the patrons of our school, and doubtless will increase the interest of the people in school work.

ELECTION RETURNS.

The following is the vote as cast in this township last Monday. The first column of figures is the vote as cast here, the second row is the vote of Plymouth, and the third row is the total vote of the township. The names appearing first for the respective offices were on the republican ticket, the second name on the democrat and the third on the prohibition. There were five votes cast in Plymouth for the Union labor candidate but none were cast here.

The amendment in regard to the governors salary was lost in this township by a vote of 261 to 181. It was carried in the state however.

A good deal of interest was manifested in Detroit in the women's voting for school inspectors. One lady, Mrs. David Parsons, was elected. The Free Press has the following in regard to one lady well known here in early years. "Mrs. Polly Carlisle, 98 years old, who has been a resident of Wayne County for over fifty years. She has a thin figure but a remarkably fine complexion and pleasing face and being helped from her carriage, she stepped quite briskly toward the window. She answered the questions put to her readily and in a firm voice and when her duty had been performed, returned to her carriage beaming with smiles. Mrs. Carlisle is the widow of the late Dr. Carlisle who for many years practiced medicine at Northville."

LIVE BUSINESS MEN

WHO MAKE THE LIVELIEST TOWN IN THE STATE.

A BRIEF REVIEW OF NORTHVILLE'S MERCANTILE AND MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.

(Written by George Phillips, of Detroit.)

In the present article the aim is to present in brief form a description of the advanced business facilities of Northville and sketches of some of its leading mercantile and manufacturing industries. That the town possesses many real and permanent advantages which being enlarged and developed by business of experience and ability has placed Northville in the first rank among the towns of the state is a fact so well established as to need no comment. The mercantile industries are in a most flourishing condition. All lines being represented by pushing business men whose energy and enterprise has made Northville the mercantile center for a large area of surrounding country. Manufacturing is largely developed there being in successful operation several important industries among which may be mentioned.

The Globe Furniture company, manufacturers of and dealers in church and school furniture and employing 175 men; the J. A. Dubuar manufacturing company, employing 55 men; the Granville Wood & Son pipe organ company employing twenty men and several smaller manufacturing companies.

The medical profession is ably represented by Dr. J. M. Swift, who has practiced here over a third of a century, Dr. J. M. Burgess, who has been here a dozen years; Dr. J. R. Avery who hung out his sign about three years ago; and Dr. C. C. Kingsbury, who was here in former years and returned a couple of years ago. For dentist's work Dr. E. N. Root and J. S. Hoar fill the wants of this place and draw custom from many neighboring towns.

The legal profession has two worthy representatives—Hon. F. S. Woodman, who has lived in this vicinity for nearly a half century, and W. W. Wendell, who commenced practicing here a year and a half ago.

We have a Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and Catholic church. A school that is a credit to any place and presided over by Prof. S. L. Houghton a young but rising teacher.

A government fish hatchery is located here and in charge of U. S. fish commissioner F. N. Clark who has charge of that line of work on the entire lakes.

Of the mercantile industries of the place we make mention of.

W. H. AMBLER.

Northville's old established well known and popular jewelry, books and stationery store carried out by W. H. Ambler will come in for a prominent mention in this review. It is now upwards of twenty years ago since this business was established. It is therefore too well and favorably known to require any extended mention. The desired popularity it has acquired has been secured by handling a superior stock and giving to the public all the advantages possible. During the long time this business has been before the public it has done a large yearly business, and has favored the town with a first class business of the kind. The stock is an excellent one and embraces in the jewelry department, watches of the best makes, clocks of great variety and jewelry of all description, silverware, etc. A large stock of books, school supplies and stationery, etc., are handled.

D. B. WILCOX & SON.

A brief reference in our business review to Northville's popular and well calculated general grocery store carried on by Messrs. D. B. Wilcox & Son, will be of general interest. It is now about two years since this business was established. It has met with gratifying success in building up a large trade, and has provided the town with a model grocery store. The public find here the choicest and best groceries in the market. The stock is large, and well selected and embraces staple and fancy groceries of all kinds, provisions, etc., and a fine display of crockery, glass and also a large line of wall papers, chinawares, etc. The business well deserves its large trade.

C. M. JOSLIN & CO.

In reviewing the business interests of the town a business that will come in for a prominent mention is that carried on by Messrs. C. M. Joslin & Co. general merchants. This business has been before the public about seven years and we may say is too well and favorably known to require any extended mention. It has always done a large trade and is deservedly popular. Mr. Joslin has been one of the most successful merchants of the town. The business was strengthened about a year ago by A. E. Cobb becoming a partner. The firm are in the very best position to offer to the public all the advantages possible. They handle an excellent stock embracing staple and fancy dry goods of all kinds, carpets, house furnishings, etc. and groceries, each department being very complete.

KNAPP & PALMER.

A good hardware, stoves and tinware establishment where the public can obtain its requirements of everything needed in this branch of mercantile industry in a town. In this respect Northville is in advance of most places of its size. In the business here referred to the citizens of the town and people of the surrounding country have all the advantages offered in the larger places. The business has been before the public upwards of a quarter of a century and is too well and favorably known to require any extended mention. It was purchased by Messrs. Knapp & Linton about four years ago. Mr. Palmer succeeded Mr. Linton. The firm are in the very best position to offer to the public all the advantage possible. They handle an excellent stock which is large and well selected. It embraces everything in the hardware line, builders' tools and materials of all kinds, all such miscellaneous lines as paints, oils, glass, nails, wire, etc. the best makes of stoves, house furnishings of all kinds in tin, iron and copper wares manufactured on the premises, jobbing in all its branches is done. The business is deservedly popular.

STARK BROS.

The well known and popular grocery and boot and shoe business of Messrs. Stark Bros. will come in for a prominent mention in this review. It is now about one year ago since this firm established. They have met with gratifying success in building up a large trade and have made their business deservedly popular. The firm have devoted their energies to furnishing the town with a first-class business of the kind and the store is one which reflects credit upon the energy and ability of the proprietors. The public find here every advantage which careful buying and efficient management can secure. The stock is an excellent one, is large and well selected. In the grocery department is a full line of pure family groceries of all kinds, provisions, etc., the choicest and best that can be obtained. In boots and shoes is a large stock of the latest and best makes of boots and shoes from the ladies finest French kid to the mens and boys heavier wear. The store is neat and attractive and well deserves its large trade.

HIGHLAND BROS.

Northville's popular meat market and provision store carried on by Messrs. Highland Bros. will come in for a permanent mention in this review. The firm are successors to Hetley & Highland and the business has been established about two years. In this business Northville has a meat market which provides the town with a first-class business of the kind. The proprietors are energetic and pushing and in the best position to keep the business at the front. The public find here the choicest and best meats of all kinds, provisions, etc., and the business is deservedly popular.

HOMES' DERMODY.

TOO LATE.

doctor's remained. He had retired from the medical profession, to follow that of literature, that was the simple announcement made—he preferred books.

But a great care was taken off Nellie's apprehensive heart, and an intolerable loss of Randall's. He could behold himself now, live his own life, and feel free of his fellow-man.

It was of necessity a bitter disappointment to his father, who was at first disposed to resent it as of Nell, and inclined to regard her success as an actual injury to her brother. It took time to force the conviction on him of, in this instance, at any rate, female supremacy; and, when at last he grudgingly admitted that his daughter had won what his son had lost, and that by superior acquirements, he qualified the acknowledgment by asserting that the latter had failed, not from lack of capacity, but because he had obstinately elected to become that "devious and indefinable thing a literateur."

Proud Mrs. Tinsel never once said, "I told you so." She was more than satisfied that for her boy the strain of a distasteful calling was at an end, and she wrote home words of approval and cheer, urging him to justify the step he had taken by doing what she was sure he would do, making the guide mark in his new profession his sister had in the one of which she was such an ornament. And in time, in very despite of himself, her husband took an increasing interest in his daughter's career and pride in her triumphs; but, by a strange contradiction, as it seemed, but in reality only in simple conformity to a nature given to good ideas, when the son, who had disappointed him so keenly did make the mark his mother predicted he would in the world of letters, he felt neither pride nor satisfaction, and acknowledged no merit.

A great eagerness seemed to have come upon Doctor Randall Thesel's fall in all eagerness to recover. He was no longer quiet and enduring, he was restless and impatient.

"I did not know that you were my old acquaintance Randall Thesel," he said to the man at the coming of the operation. "What have you been under some other obligation?"

Randall smiled at the unasked question.

"I only discovered your identity," he said hastily, "by accident, but you taking things up with me has led me to the problem of this intended operation upon you. You have altered it one of the most interesting cases of the day, to my personal gain—nothing, absolutely nothing on the score of skill."

"What a waste of time! A few days later, I shall have lost the operation to the system—the operation I am in tonight—I need to work for the nightshift," he seemed to bring an apologetic smile over his calm features. "I cannot now afford to postpone. I asked him once but he was too much worked, and then his value seemed to increase. There must be some mistake here. I don't remember."

Mrs. Mellan thought that only saw once, but she only remembered the operation was getting warm and exciting things—they were not to be faulted. But the Colonel was not satisfied.

At last the day came when it was pronounced safe for Colonel Leslie Gordon to be moved to the country. He was to go to his sister's country-seat. Randall came to bid him goodbye, and to see him safely conveyed to the station. He did not seem to require much care and he said so. Wasted skill and time looking there were evidences of quickly returning strength. He said that morning dressed as usual without assistance—the old Randall with satisfaction—and the day before had taken a half-hour's walk in the Green Park without much fatigue.

"I'm naturally strong," he said. "A week of country air will set me on my legs. You'll see that I'll be at the opening of Parliament." Then he bowed, and added hesitatingly—"How is your sister, Randall? I don't forget you were only sick when I was at St. Thomas."

"My sister is well," Randall replied, a little stiffly. "She lives with me—no doctor did her practice."

"Ah—she went in for medicine. Didn't she?—to be a nurse, I suppose?"

"My sister, Colonel Gordon, is one of the most rising physicians of the day. I hear the carriage—you mustn't be late for the train!" and, with an air of haughty, Randall lifted the Colonel's wraps and led the way to the door.

It had been on Lyon Leslie's tongue to ask if his old acquaintance, the pretty Nell, still held him in remembrance; but the flash on her brother's cheek warned him that he was on dangerous ground. With a heavy sigh, a feeling of intolerance smallness, a sudden swelling up of a yearning regret, a dissatisfaction with himself and with Randall, he followed the latter to the carriage.

"I will come and see you," he said, as he took Randall's reluctant hand. "Will you remember me to your sister?"

Randall bowed gravely, but said nothing.

CHAPTER VIII.

Colonel Gordon, in his anxiety to get

"I am creation; and, like the beautiful fabrics of all such visions, he has annihilated. Do not mistake me; what I thought he was I shall always love, and I shall dream no more dreams." Then she turned quickly and opened a secret drawer in a cabinet, and laid in his hand the tiny link that had been returned to her so many years ago.

"Andrew Kennett sent it back to me," she said; "it was stolen from my room. Read that."

He obeyed her, taking from her a slip of paper and opening it. It ran thus:—

"I do confess I did take a link out of Miss Thane's chain. I did find the chain on her table one morning; her room was open, and I did do it for a bit of fun."

That was all. The document was signed in due form by the Baron.

"Then why," he asked trembling, "shamed—why did you return me the chain?"

"Because," she replied simply—"because, Colonel Gordon, I read your note to my mother, and I thought it better to take no love-gift until I was old enough to understand the tender passion."

She looked at him, with no scorn in her sweet eyes, only very sorrowful as if for both.

A moment's silence, and then a great wave of passion rose in the man's heart. He dashed the link into the fire, the chain and lockets, too; and only the soft curl he held safe and close. He knelt to her, he pleaded his rescue from death at her hands—his instinct told him we love the thing we serve—her own love, which he defied to deny or to live down; he swore he would only live at her bidding, that body, soul and spirit were hers and hers only for all time and to all hereafter. He challenged her to take on her blood-guiltiness, that more than mortal life lay at her word—a human soul.

"I will do what you make me, Nell; you will raise me step by step till I come to your ideal once more, the woman Leslie, dear, who stood by your side, your hand in his, watching the great sorrow-moors drift down the little stream. If no one had come between us with worldly wisdom and cold caution, the other world never have been opened—other worlds would have been spoken that never could have been unsaid, and I would have been bound to you. We Leslie are men of honor, Nell."

"Are you?" she said. "Then I do not rightly know what honor means. Do you know I am glad you did not seek those words, for then perhaps my eyes might have been opened long since, now I remember one that perished." Her voice was soft and low, then it changed and she went on at length passionately, yet with a strong restraint that told how well she was governed. "I would not do you the injustice to marry you, Colonel Gordon, because I could never forget how lightly you held the love that was dear to this world to me, and I could never trust you wholly. Can you realize how I suffer—what you blighted my woman's life, that you nearly broke my heart, Lyon Leslie? Hush!" she added, as he would have interrupted her. "Listen a brief moment! My heart has taught me much, it has taught me of diseases so inherent in the body as to be beyond the skill of medicine to cure; the taint can only be covered, not to break out again and again; and so the body is, so is the mind. A taint will break out again and again. Fear heart is not sound, Lyon Leslie; it would play me false again. It played you false this very hour, when you tried to lay the blame of your old cold passion on another, tried ever to make me believe that you had thought me foolish; you knew it was not truth you spoke. Untruth is inherent in your nature, and the taint will break out again and again. I will not link my fate with yours."

At these strong words his mood changed, he was stung to the quick; so stung, anger mastered shame.

"So be it!" he cried. "I will not ask again: your unnatural calling has made you cruel. You are a pedant, you are self-righteous. It is human to err; it is divine to forgive; you would not be divine if you could—"

He turned from her with a bitter pang, she stood so meekly still, her spiritual face, pale with anguish, but there was no wavering there. She looked at him with a dumb reproach, and then, noting his changing color, she remembered how weak he must necessarily be still, as indeed he was—things began to seem indistinct before him, and he caught at the table as he made for the door.

"Say," she cried; "drink this!"—reaching to his lips a cordial hastily poured out.

It was the old tone of authority strangely familiar to him: it seemed natural to him to obey. In his weakness he was conscious of the soothing sensation her presence had before produced, when she smoothed his sick pillow at night.

"Nell," he said, pleading once more—"Nell, my very pride is dead. I would be as good to you. Will you not forgive?"

"Forgive you, Lyon? Yes, I forgive you; but we need no more." Her tears fell fast, but her voice was steady. She went on taking his hand her's and holding it as in farewell—and do me no further injustice—for the man I loved—I shall love always,

—O Lyon Leslie—I knew before that —the silentest day eight years ago. No other shall ever take his place; for the —years that may still be mine, I live for —art alone; but”—she caught his —and held it to his heart; looking —to him, with eyes full of pain and —solve, pouring out her words with
—Perchance and so thou art; thy soul,
—and so thou lean on our fair father Christ,
—the water in that world where all are pure
—two may meet before High God, and
—It spring to me and claim no false.”
—She ceased. He stood, as if stunned, —his dumb agony. Then she leant —ward, raised her face to his, which —dunk on his breast, laid a light
—on his quivering eyes, and felt him
—A few weeks later, the departure of —Colonel Leslie Gordon for the Congo
—was announced. He had gone, so —the papers, to recruit his strength —for assuming the command of his —giment, ordered to Africa on active —service. Lady Masters accompanied
—The Baron von Melkenburg did not —make the noble alliance the society
—journals had announced. At Nell's re—quest Randall sought an interview —with the Earl of Wratelm, and laid be—fore him a short document containing —certain revelations made by the late —William Stubbs, once stud-groom to —the noble Netlethorpe of Netlethorpe
—Hall. That part of the revelations —touching sundry turf transactions was —quite unpoisoned by the noble Earl, but —when they extended to particulars of —a Baron's parentage and true pat—ronymic, which was—as set forth in —the said revelations—Bill Batts, his —righteous wrath broke out, and his —sense of honor experienced a sudden —thickening. He was able to make —very good terms with the illustrious —foreigner, and Lady Webster Wedger
—entered once more in the homo-
—naming for the matrimonial stakes.
—Nell knows no hours of vain regret —over art life's life; but yet she some—times questions, when for a brief mo—ment that dull aching tells how deep —her wound has been, if it is indeed
—“Fetter to have loved and lost
—Toa never to have loved at all.”
—THE END.

Arid Lands.

Major Powell of the geological survey has been explaining to the public committee on public lands his plan for the reclamation of the arid lands throughout the great Western continent. The plan, which is but imperfectly understood, has many points of interest. Major Powell is very careful to make it clear that the plan does not contemplate the improvement of private property, and that it has no resemblance to the Mississippi levee scheme. The plan does not contemplate the irrigation of public lands at the government expense nor for the improvement of private property at public cost. The geological survey proposes to collect the necessary information at present to determine whether these great storage reservoirs can be successfully established. The work was begun in the last congress with a comparatively small appropriation. Major Powell, who has made this project the study of many years, is so confident of success that he believes that it will result in adding at least 100,000,000 acres to the arable lands of the country. Some ten years ago Mr. Powell made his first report on the arid lands west of the 100th meridian. That report has been the standard for all discussions on the subject since that time. It contained the first extended statement of scientific methods of irrigation in this country, and was used for a guide for great many experiments, most of which have proved successful, by settlers on the frontier. The results of his work are being daily received at the geographical survey in the form of topographical maps, field notes and written reports as to certain great regions in California, Colorado, New Mexico and Montana. It is maintained that when this work shall have been done for the whole arid region the task of reclaiming by private enterprise will be comparatively easy. These maps and reports will indicate the irrigable lands and the conditions to be complied with to make them fertile. The water supply to be depended upon will be made known, and the condition necessary to procure and distribute it.

His Annual Report.

An old chap who had been conducting a private bank in Wisconsin for the last five or six years, was told by several of his depositors in December that he ought to come out on the first of the year with an annual report.

“What for?” he asked in great surprise.

“Why, to let people know how you stand financially.”

Soon after New Year's day the old man tacked up a paper on the bank door, reading:

Notice.—This 'ere bank has got $55,000 behind her. She don't owe nobody a cent no more. Good paper distributed as heretofore, and nobody proposes to cut sticks for Mexico or Canada.—Wall Street News.

LIVE BUSINESS MEN.

JOHN HIRSCH.

Prominent in the manufacturing interests of Northville is the old established, well-known and popular carriage manufacturing and general blacksmithing business of Mr. John Hirsch. It is now about twenty-five years ago since Mr. Hirsch established. He has met with gratifying success in building up a large trade and his business is widely and favorably known. During the long time the business has been before the public it has turned out a large amount of rigs of all kinds, the superiority of which, and excellent workmanship has secured for the business a deserved popularity. All pairs of wheeled vehicles are manufactured, carriages, buggies, wagons, etc., and a general blacksmithing business is done. The business well deserves its large trade.

A. M. RANDOLPH.

The above named gentleman has been engaged in the drug business in Northville for over a third of a century, and his store is therefore one of the pioneer mercantile institutions of the town. He is an experienced and competent chemist and druggist and he carries a large stock of pure drugs of all kinds, druggists sundries, the leading patent medicines, etc. Prescription work receives careful and prompt attention.

C. A. HUTTON.

A recent acquisition to the business interests of Northville, is the well equipped grocery store of Mr. C. A. Hutton. In a review of the town this business will come in for a prominent mention. Judging from the very favorable start made and the excellent stock of goods put in the business will rapidly develop a large trade. Mr. Hutton was formerly engaged in the mercantile trade here and is widely and favorably known. The store presents every indication that it will meet with gratifying success. It is a model grocery, in every respect and the aim is to handle the choicest and best groceries in the market. The stock embraces pure family groceries of all kinds, provisions, etc., and every department is complete. A new and attractive feature which Mr. Hutton has added to his store is the Bazaar department of bargain counter which contains a collection of useful and ornamental articles too numerous to mention. The goods are all new and well worth inspection.

GEO. E. WATERMAN & CO.

A few words in our review to Northville's popular and well conducted hardware, stoves and tinware business carried on by Messrs. Geo. E. Waterman & Co. will be of general interest. It is now about four years ago since this business was established. It has met with gratifying success and the firm are in the best position to offer to the public all the advantages possible. The stock is in excellent care and is large and well selected. It embraces everything in the hardware line, builder's tools and materials of all kinds, all such miscellaneous lines as paints, oils, glass, nails, wire, etc., also stoves of the best makes and house furnishings of all kinds in tin, iron and copper wares manufactured on the premises. Special attention is given to jobbing in all its branches. The business well deserves its large trade.

TEICHNER & CO.

By the establishment of the above named firm in Northville the mercantile interests of the town has received an important acquisition, and one that will add a new feature and new life to our mercantile trade. The firm are energetic, experienced and competent, and in the very best position to offer to the public all the advantages possible. There is no doubt but this business will exert a marked influence in stimulating the volume of business and in drawing trade to the town. In addition to the advantages the store will offer to the public in the way of selection and worthy of an excellent stock, the principle they have established of paying cash for farm produce, butter, eggs, etc., will meet the approval of the farming community, and such commendable enterprise will doubtless be rewarded.

A. E. ROCKWELL.

Northville's old established, well known and popular jewelry business, carried on by A. E. Rockwell with this review. It is now about twenty years ago since Mr. Rockwell established. He has met with gratifying success in building up a large trade and has made his business deservedly popular. During the long time the business has been before the public it is unnecessary for us to say has offered advantages in its line and has furnished the town with a first-class business of the kind. It is a model jewelry store in every respect. Enjoying the advantages of long and practical experience. Mr. Rockwell is a jeweler of more than ordinary ability and in the best position to offer to the public the best goods at the most reasonable prices. The store is well appointed and the stock complete with everything in the line of watches, clocks, jewelry, silverware, etc., also stationery, etc., is carried. Repairing in all its branches receives special attention. The business well deserves its large trade. Mr. Rockwell has just received from the east a very fine chronometer which he has in his store.

SANDS & PORTER.

Northville possesses the advantages of a furniture and undertaking business which is one of the best in this section of the country. The business of Messrs. Sands & Porter is one of the pioneer institutions of the town. It has always done a large trade and is deservedly popular. The business has been raised to a high standard and offers great advantages in its lines. An inspection of the show rooms and the excellent stock of goods displayed will convince you they are in the best position to supply the public with everything in their lines. The stock embraces parlor, dining, kitchen and bedroom furniture of all kinds, several from the best wholesale manufacturing and is of special value. The undertaking department receives special attention, being equipped with a full line of everything necessary, a fine hearse, coffins, caskets and funeral supplies of all kinds, etc. The firm are experienced and competent embalmers and do everything in the line in the most professional manner.

JOHN NEVISON.

Among the recent acquisitions to the business interests of Northville is the popular and well conducted harness manufacturing business of John Nevison. It is now about six months ago since Mr. Nevison established. He has met with gratifying success in building up a satisfactory trade. The deserved popularity the business has acquired has been secured by turning out an excellent class of work. Enjoying the advantages of long and practical experience, Mr. Nevison is a workman of more than ordinary ability. All kinds of harness light and heavy, double and single, collars, etc., are manufactured and a full line of whips, combs, brushes is on hand. The business well deserves its rapidly increasing trade.

THOMAS CHAPPELL.

About a year and a half ago T. Chappell commenced the manufacture of cigars in Northville, and has since been conducting the business with marked success. Enjoying the advantages of long and practical experience, Mr. Chappell thoroughly understands the business and is turning out a class of goods that has secured for his business a deserved popularity. He uses the best of material and the cigars manufactured at his factory may be relied upon for their superior quality. The following are the principal brands made: the J. B. C. and Star of Trade, each ten cent cigars, and Gold Band, Pure Quick, Dandy Shape and Reina, extra, each five cent cigars. Dealers desiring any special brands can be supplied. In order to confine their attention exclusively to manufacturing, the retail department which is a flourishing condition is offered for sale.

C. R. STEVENS.

Northville's popular and well-known drug and stationery store, carried on by C. R. Stevens, must come in for a prominent mention in this review. In this business the citizens of our town and people of the surrounding country have the advantages of one of the best places of the kind in this section of the country. The business has been before the public a number of years, and is too well and familiarly known to require any extended mention. He has met with more than ordinary success and has raised the business to a high standard. The deserved popularity it has acquired has been secured by handling a superior stock, and by careful and able management. The store is a large brick, well appointed and handsomely equipped. The stock which is noted for its excellence, embraces a full line of pure drugs, druggists' sundries, the leading patent medicines; also books, school supplies, stationery, etc.

W. D. Sull, druggist, Hesperia, Ind., writes: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hara, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, writes: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at J. M. etc. The business is well conducted and enjoys a large trade.

GILSON & BROWN.

About two years ago Gilson &
Brown started a photographic gallery here, under the management of H. F.
Brown, an artist of experience and ability, and it has been very successfully conducted. No better evidence of the merits of the business can be given, than the fact of the large trade has been built up. The deserved popularity it has acquired has been secured by turning out a superior class of work. Enjoying the advantages of long and practical experience Mr.
Brown is a photographer of more than ordinary ability. All kinds of photographic work is done from an ordinary portrait to the most elegant cabinet.
A specialty is also made of enlarging to life size by the different processes, promide, india ink, etc. The studio is handsomely fitted up with all the latest appliances, fine scenery, etc. The business well deserves its rapidly increasing trade.

T. G. RICHARDSON.

It would be an incomplete review to omit the name appearing at the head of this article. At present he is doing the exclusive business of the town in clothing and has a large trade in boots and shoes. He owns his building and carries a very complete stock in all of his lines. He is progressive and abreast of the times. Lately he purchased the bankrupt stock of J. R.
Corson, he has added many new goods and now has a very complete line of dry goods and notions. He does business on the cash plan, buying and selling for cash. He is a successful merchant and very obliging to all.

noted about it was the presence of men who had evidently all they could carry of something stronger than cold water. It is our individual opinion that not the least regard is paid to the law.

Notice is out for the citizens of Plymouth to vote on March 28, 1898 to be added to the building fund at the coming election April 8th, 1898. It seems our regular election was too hasty to hold legally so it is necessary for us to have another. We hope this time the village council will be posted enough on the law to conduct it in a legal manner.
