HAS HER HANDS FULL.

A Teacher Who Looks After More Than Fifty Youngsters.

To the majority of our readers, the subject of our sketch this week needs no introduction. With the average child between the age of 5 and 7 the face is almost as familiar as the little one's own parents. Miss Gillet may be said to be practically a Northville girl. She attended school here in the 70's and graduated under Prof. Webster in the class of '86.

NELLIE N. GILLET.

As a teacher in the Northville school she has been a decided success, it never had a better one, this being her fourth year in the first primary department, and her work has been very pleasing to the school board and the patrons of the school.

Last term there were 68 scholars enrolled in this room, with an average attendance of 52. This winter term there are 58 enrolled, with an average attendance of about 40.

Visitors to the Northville school find this room a great attraction, and a room full of bright, pretty children busily at work, or at class recitation each wildly endeavoring to answer every question put to the class is certainly a pretty picture. It takes a vast amount of patience and care to manage 50 or 60 youngsters we should judge, but the young lady seems equal to the occasion. We respectfully doff our hat to the lady.

DECIDED TO GO.

Rev. L. G. Clark Will Preach His Farewell Sermon March 19.

At the Baptist services last Sunday Rev. L. G. Clark notified his congregation that he had fully considered their request for the withdrawal of his resignation, and while he fully appreciated their appeal and kindness, at the same time he had concluded a change was for the best.

March 29th finishes Mr. Clark's seven years labor here and they have been very successful ones indeed. The congregation and people alike of our village will be extremely sorry to lose Mr. Clark and his family from our midst.

PRACTICAL TEMPERANCE.

Northville Citizens Again Show Their Philanthropy.

The generosity of our Northville people is again brought to the front. A subscription paper started Thursday morning before noon had fifty dollars subscribed and more promised toward sending one of our citizens to the Yarnall Gold Cure Institute. The man has a family, a wife and three children, and when sober is a good industrious worker, but his appetite for strong drink is beyond his control and he cannot be relied upon. When graduated from this institute a reformed man, free from any appetite for liquors his family will be well cared for, and happy and Northville citizens will have demonstrated that practical temperance is a good investment for all who gave.

INJURED WHILE COASTING.

An Ann Arbor Lady Meets With a Bad Accident.

While coasting with hundreds of others on the boulevard heights Monday evening, Miss Cora Alexandre, of Ann Arbor, sister of Miss Emma Alexandre, teacher in the Northville school, with whom she has been visiting for a week past, was run over by a following coaster and quite badly injured about the back and arms. There were a dozen or so occupants on the head coaster and when it slew around side ways all jumped in time except Miss Alexandre who was near the middle and no way to escape until too late, the rapidly approaching coaster just behind them and in an instant there was a collision. Miss Alexandre was thrown under the runners and the coaster passed over her. She was picked up unconscious and carried to Mr. Covert's residence and afterwards to her sister's boarding house. Dr. Burgess, the attending physician, states that the injuries are, fortunately, not serious and the young lady will soon recover from a very narrow escape of a fatal accident.

Miss Alexandre is feeling better this morning.

A ROUSING MEETING.

The Men's Meeting Sunday Proved Attractive and Interesting.

In response to the call there were about seventy-five men at the W. C. T. U. hall Sunday afternoon to listen to the address of Prof. Don C. Bliss. For his subject Prof. Bliss chose "Christian Courage" and he handled the topic in exceedingly creditable manner, and the audience were both pleased and interested. Following this talk, a statement of the work of the committee who had the work in charge was read.

After some talk, it was suggested that in organizing it be done with as little machinery as possible in order to keep together. The following officers were elected:

President—Prof. Don C. Bliss.
Vice-Pres.—J. A. Dubuar.
Sec. and Treas.—C. A. Hutton.

The above officers with W. H. Young and Chas. Dolph, constitute the executive committee.

A committee of five were appointed to have the new gymnasium scheme worked up in proper shape and to this end, Harry German, Thad Knapp, F. D. Adams, W. G. Yerkes, and E. Wright were appointed. They are all hustlers and there is no question of their successful work.

The workers hope to have, and are certainly entitled to, the earnest support of all men who are interested in the well fare of mankind.

RUMOR IS FALSE.

The Yarnall Gold Cure Is in Northville to Stay.

From some unknown source, and for some unaccountable reason, a rumor has in some way been circulated about the village of late to the effect that the Yarnall Gold Cure contemplated leaving Northville.

Dr. Yarnall informs us that such a rumor is not only false, but without any foundation. He says, as he has repeatedly said before, that the Yarnall Gold Cure is here to stay.

Such reports are malicious and should be nipped in the bud. The Northville Institute is second to none in the United States judging from a successful stand point and its present patronage averages well with the best institutions today.

THE RECORD.

NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN

A LARGE sponge swabbed over Chicago from Hyde park to Lake View would present a large soggy gob of mud stuck over with scraps of big buildings and cable cars.

A DETROIT anarchist wrote a funeral sermon and was so well pleased with the effort that he killed himself to fit it. His successful effort to prevent a waste of literary material is generally commended.

THERE is a scramble for the millions of the Economites. It is understood that Ted would be pleased to soothe the itch of his palm with some of the gold. The great state of Pennsylvania also wants it. In the contention the only certainty is that the Economites are going to get left.

BURGERS have recently defaced several prettily painted safes. The suggestion is made that to prevent this mutilation the safes be left open. If the only safety of the safe is in being left with its steely gates ajar, what advantage has the safe over a refrigerator or a pasteboard bandbox? The safe has been looked upon as an obstacle in the path of the hard-working burglar. Now its design seems to be to hospitably cheer him on his way.

ADDITIONAL deaths and new cases of cholera continue to be reported from Marselles. An investigation of the nature and cause of the disease has been made by the Marselles board of health, but for some unexplained reason it has indefinitely postponed the publication of its report. Under these circumstances the strictest quarantine against this French city is justifiable and should be maintained till its normal condition of health is restored.

The sultan of Turkey will permit the Bible to circulate among his subjects provided that it shall first be revised to conform to his own ideas. That is exactly the way more highly civilized people have, without committing themselves, viewed the matter, but the sultan has boldly gone about the work. What he permits to survive the process of expurgation will open new fields to missionaries. Their efforts will naturally be devoted to suppressing the book.

Of the 90,000 people of the Hawaiian islands less than 25,000 are natives, and these are not the naturally dominant classes either by intelligence or wealth. The greatest surprise is that a government thus set up on the apex of a pyramid should have endured so long as it has without toppling over. Thirty or forty years ago English influence was dominant in these islands, but it has been gradually increasing and that of Americans has increased in like proportion.

AND now what was wont to be termed "cramps," which many a boy who has ventured in bathing in an early spring morning has felt, is to be rechristened. A Jersey City doctor has decided to place that peculiar twinge in a young fellow's knees or arms which makes them feel as if they were tied in a double bow-knot, under that terribly overworked head, "heart failure." Henceforth when a youngster goes to a watery grave he goes there not by "cramps," not by drowning, but by heart failure.

The project is on foot in Canada to encourage matrimony by taxing all bachelors from $100 to $500 per annum. This plan has been prompted by the fact that the reports of the census taker are not encouraging to those who believe in the future glory of her majesty's government in America. The population in Canada seems to be at a standstill, but it is not altogether probable that the plan to arrest the Canadian population decay by taxation will prove successful. Already there is a hegira of Canadian bachelors to the states which a taxation of $100 to $500 per annum will certainly not prevent. On the contrary, it is likely to encourage a still more formidable hegira.

"THE next twenty years present the most glorious opportunity for work and results which the church has ever had in this country. I want to live." These words were spoken by Bishop Brooks when in confident expectation of living the twenty years which he regarded as "the most glorious opportunity for work the church ever had," and yet within a few hours afterward his work and life abruptly ended. The incident recalls that of the once famous witer "Fanny Fern," sister of N. P. Willis, the poet, and wife of James Parton, the historian. She wrote a glowing letter on the pleasures of life, closing with the words: "I thank Thee, O God, that I live," but when the letter appeared in the journal to which it was addressed the writer was dead and buried.

A WELL KNOWN politician is reported to have refused to vote for his own father because the old gentleman was not born in this country. This may be patriotism, but it seems very like resentment for sundry spankings laid on by an alien for the benefit of a native-born youth.

A POOR French peasant woman whose husband was seriously wounded by a German forester on the Alsatian frontier has refused to accept the indemnity of 2,500 francs offered her by the German government.

IT WAS NOT A MURDER.

BILL KILLED THE MAN IN SELF-DEFENSE.

Besides the Victim Was a Curanda Thief and Deserved Death—A Night Scene in an Arizona Gambling Dive.

Nogales is a little town down in Southern Arizona that is part American and part Mexican in more senses than one, for it calmly sits upon the international boundary line, and owes half its allegiance to Mexico and half to the United States, writes Frank R. Linn. Thus the resident of Nogales is much better off than Lieutenant Nolan, for, instead of being a man without a country, he is a man with two countries.

The boundary line between the two republics runs exactly along the center of the principal street, so a man needn't leave the town nor walk very far to plant one foot in Mexican soil, and yet retain a purchase upon the land of the free, etc. This peculiar situation is often taken advantage of by deserting soldiers from the Southern Arizona forts, who are inclined to be facetious, says the Detroit Free Press. They go over to the Mexican side of the main street, and when the sergeant and his squad, who are in pursuit arrive in town they find the deserters sitting out in front of a saloon enjoying life, and making faces at their pursuers, with perfect impunity, for desertion is not an extraditable offense.

All the sergeant can do is to sit down and patiently wait in the hope that the deserter will fidget enough to make him reckless and bring him across that invisible but unbreachable line. Nor is Nogales a very virtuous town. In fact, it is somewhat "tough." Almost every man carries a "gun," and is ready to use it when his rights are trampled upon or his honor wounded.

During the Geronimo campaign I went down to Nogales to visit a friend of mine, and one night he took me out to see the sights. Among other sports on the elephant was the biggest saloon and gambling-house in the town. I forgot now who ran it, but that doesn't matter. After passing around and looking on awhile at the various games we sat down at a table near a party of poker-players and watched the animated scene. I was particularly interested in one of the players at the table next to us, who apparently had phenomenal luck nudging from the pile of gold, silver and chips in front of him.

He was a big, black-bearded, swarthy looking man, with mean, restless eyes, and as another big, full-bearded man, toying with a huge pistol, approached the table with a quick stride, I fancied that he suddenly grew a shade paler. He made an almost imperceptible movement to reach toward his hips, but apparently changed his mind and gazed intently at the cards. By this time the other big man was opposite him. "So, you dirty, mean skunk," said he, "I've run you down at last, have I?"

The game ceased, and the participants in the game waited passively to hear the outcome. This was a quarrel between two men—a personal and private matter—and it would have been impertinence or breach of etiquette on their part to have interfered by word or act.

"Yes, you've run me down," as you put it," replied the other. "What do you want to say to me? Hurry up and don't delay the game."

"What do I want to say to you," the other burst out furiously, "and with a volley of oaths, 'I don't want to say anything to you, you thief. I want to put a bullet into your dirty carcass, and I'm going to do it. Draw your gun. I'll give you one chance for your life.'"

By this time the noise had attracted attention. The players had crowded to the side walls, and there was a clear passage for the bullets that were momentarily expected to commence flying. The proprietor of the gambling den was hastening toward the disputants, shouting, as he came, a warning to them to desist.

"Shoot, if you want to, Bill," said the black-bearded man, his face as pale as death; "but if you do you murder me, for I haven't a gun on my person."

"You haven't, eh?" replied the other insolently. "Well, I'll shoot no man like a rat. But you miserable hound, after 4 o'clock this morning I'll kill you on sight, gun or no gun. Fair warning. Look out for yourself."

He turned to move away, when, quick as a flash, the black-bearded man sprang to his feet, drew a revolver and fired at the retreating figure.

"Look out!" shouted some one in the crowd who had observed the movement.

The man gave a start and a half turn, and the motion saved his life, for the bullet grazed his head and tossed a lock of his thick hair into the air. Before the black-bearded man could recover the other shot. The bullet crashed through the gambler's heart, and he dropped down dead. In the confusion which followed my friend and I escaped into the street.

I was obliged to leave Nogales the next day, but at the first opportunity I wrote and asked for information concerning the outcome of this little episode, and "what they had done with the murderer."

"Why, you poor tenderfoot," my friend wrote back. "You wouldn't call that a murder, would you? In the first place, the man would have been justified in shooting, under any circumstances, for the other had robbed him of a mine in Mexico. And, secondly, the black-bearded coward shot first, and when his adversary's back was turned, and deserved what he got in return for that alone. What did they do with the 'murderer'? They gave him the dead man's winnings in the poker game."

HELD UP.

But the Stranger Opened His Mouth and the Footpad Fled.

Footpad—Hold up yer hands. Belated Stranger, hastily complying—Certainly, and while my hands are in this position permit me to call your attention to a new and improved arrangement of my own invention: for attaching a cuff to the sleeve of a shirt and holding it in its proper place so it will not slip or become loose, but remain rigidly fixed, at the exact point where you fasten it, no matter what the strain will be, it will never project too far beyond the edge of the coat sleeve if properly attached in the first place, nor will it ever slip suddenly off the hand in a moment of excitement or sudden gesture, such as every human being, more particularly a gentleman, is liable when least expected, to the annoyance and mortification of the wearer, yet, as you see, the cuff may be detached by a simple pressure of the thumb and finger, either for removal or for changing the adjustment up or down the wrist as may be necessitated by the length of the sleeve which is not always the same in the case of all the coats in a gentleman's wardrobe some of them being for dress occasions, and necessarily of greater length than these used for business or working purposes but what I claim, and am prepared to show to the satisfaction of any man, is that this simple device which should be a part of every gentleman's wardrobe by simply placing it in the button-hole of the cuff in the manner in which you see it here, before you and bringing the spring clamps together at any point that may be desirable between the gusset and the binding at the end of the sleeve in the manner indicated will give the most perfect satisfaction in every case or money refunded—and in order to introduce this most desirable invention into your city I am furnishing them at the ridiculously low price of—

[But the foot pad had fled howling down the street.]—Chicago Tribune.

Two Remarkable Epitaphs.

The two most remarkable epitaphs in the United States are those of Daniel Barrow, formerly of Sacramento, Cal., and that of Hank Monk, Horace Greeley's stage driver. The former reads as follows: "Here is laid Daniel Barrow, who was born in Sorrow and borrowed little from nature except his name and his love to mankind and his hatred for redskins: Who was nevertheless a gentleman and a dead shot, who through a long life never killed his man except in self defense or by accident, and who, when he at last went under beneath the bullets of his cowardly enemies in Jeff Morris' saloon, did so in the sure and certain hope of a glorious and everlasting morrow." Hank Monk's epitaph reads thus: "Sacred to the memory of Hank Monk, the whitest, biggest-hearted and best known stage driver of the West, who was kind to all and thought of none. He lived in a strange era and was a hero, and the wheels of his coach are now ringing on the Golden Streets."

Marquis True to His Friend.

The Marquis of Worcester, calling for a glass of claret wine, was told by his physician that claret was not good for his gout.

"What," said the marquis, "my old friend, claret? Nay, give it to me in spite of all physicians and their books for it never shall be said that I forsook my friend for my enemy."

Very Effective.

Brushleigh—That picture of yours, "An Impending Storm," is wonderfully realistic.

Falette—I suppose it must be. I showed it to Cadleigh the other day and he immediately borrowed my best umbrella.

LINCOLN KNEW BUTLER.

THE PRESIDENT EXERCISED HIS PATIENCE.

An Old Soldier Tells a Story That Well Illustrates the Character of Both Men—How "Joe" Hawley Put Butler Down.

Those who served in the union army from 1861 to 1864 heard much of General Butler. Once met he was a man never to be forgotten. Through a soldier friend I was constrained to participate in certain matters which illustrate in a marked degree General Butler's well-known obstinacy and natural independence, and I now recall the incidents as a part of my experience while in the service, writes J. A. H. in the Philadelphia Times. One day in 1863 Colonel Martin came to me where I was on duty in one of the bureaus of the war department at Washington and told me he was in trouble. He told me he had been on duty under Butler in Virginia and the general had peremptorily dismissed him upon a false charge of drunkenness when upon duty. Of course everyone knew that an officer could not be dismissed in such a way as that and I suggested an appeal to the president. Through my superior officer I was able to procure an audience with President Lincoln, who was evidently impressed with Martin's story, and wrote a note to Secretary Stanton, who issued an order to Butler to reinstate Colonel Martin in his command or file proper charges against him. This pleased us much and we thought the colonel was soon to be all right. But inside of a week he was back again in Washington, declaring that Butler had refused to obey the order and, after abusing him, had torn the paper up and stamped it under his feet.

Now the matter had become serious, and my chief and myself felt sure the president would do something "awful" to Butler for his insubordination. On the following day President Lincoln gave us an interview, and after hearing Colonel Martin's story appeared somewhat annoyed. Finally he himself wrote an order in his own hand and over his own signature directing General Butler to reinstate Colonel Martin in his command upon receiving the paper. Now, surely, the matter was settled all right, and we felt happy. Ten days afterwards Colonel Martin came back and reported that Butler had flatly refused to reinstate him, declaring that he knew the facts in the case better than the president did, and that he would not obey the order, as he had already put another officer in command of the regiment. When this was reported to the president he smiled a little, and at last spoke: "Now, colonel, you see yourself how I am placed. Of course, I could deprive Butler of his command, but would that be the best thing for the country? Under all the circumstances, I feel like letting the matter drop; but I will give you another place, that will perhaps suit you as well." The president kept his promise and Colonel Martin did not leave the service under a cloud.

Those who delight to hear how a headstrong and unreasonable man may at times be brought to taste of some of his own ill-manners will be pleased to learn that in General Joseph Hawley, the distinguished senator from Connecticut, General Butler found a man his equal in forcible language as well as ingenuity in expedients. At the time Butler was under his command, and one day received from Butler an order to do something distasteful. Turning to the aid who brought the order, he remarked: "You tell General Butler that I shan't obey his order. He is a d-d old fool, and if he wants this thing done he had better come and do it himself." The aid departed and that was the last of it.

But General Butler was a sincere patriot, a friend of the poor and oppressed always and pleaded many a client's cause without hope of reward. He sprang from the common people and was proud of it, and their wants, their aspirations, their endless toil, their unnumbered hardships found in him an ardent sympathizer. He was liberal and kind, and under his somewhat brusque exterior carried a heart that could be touched by any tale of pity. Like all such men, he aroused the fiercest opposition of his enemies. There were many who denied him every virtue, believing him almost a demon. But he was a man of the finest sensibilities, though his best friends could never quite call him "gentleman."

Costly Shirts.

There was a time when all linen shirts were generally worn by the rich men of the town, and there are a number of the old guard, and many of the younger men of the town, that pay so much as twelve dollars each, or $144 per dozen, for their all the white linen shirts. These are with and without collars and cuffs. The laundries do not get a chance at them. Some old-fashioned retainer handles them tenderly, and gets the homelike dull-finish on the starched front.—Clothing and Furnisher.

She Was Free to Ask.

Two sparks standing together in the cloisters, and, seeing a pretty lady pass, one of them said: "There goes the handsomest woman I ever saw in my life." She, hearing his remark, turned back, and, seeing him very ugly, replied: "Sir, I would I could, in way of requital say as much of you." "Faith," says he, "so you may and lie, as I did."

"The use of 'Castoria' is so universal and its merits so well known that it seems a waste of supererogation to endorse it. Few are the intelligent families who do not keep Castoria within easy reach." CARLOS MARTIN, D. D., New York City.

PASTOR KOEHN'S NERVE TONIC

The Best Remedy
In this world, says J. H. H. of Syracuse, N. Y., is Pastor Koehn's Nerve Tonic, because my son, who was partially paralyzed three years ago and attacked by fits, has not had any symptoms of them since he took one bottle of the remedy. I most heartily thank for it.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Oct. 17, 1890.

Some time ago a stroke so affected my nerves that at times they were beyond control, eyes were dull and without expression, and a twitching of the muscles of the face and almost continual movement of the hands and arms, especially the left side. There was impediment of speech, and at times would be so overcome with dizziness as to be unable to stand. Heard of Pastor Koehn's Nerve Tonic; tried one bottle, and noticed a great change; tried another, and now can say that I am enjoying perfect health, steady nerves and a good appetite, which I had lost entirely before using your medicine.

"You don't know her? Why, she is the pretty little brunette whom you saw here last night."
Miss Oldgirl—A woman is simply as old as she seems. Wooden—Oh, my dear madam, I should have placed you twenty years below that.
Mrs. Staplate—Is that clock right?
Miss DePink, wearily—I think it must need cleaning. It's been two or three hours going that last hour.
Old Lady—I hope, my boy, that you do not sell papers on Sunday. Small Boy—No, mum. I ain't big enough to carry a Sunday edition yet.
Clerer-ton—Back so soon? I thought you intended to stay in Boston a week.
Dasha-way—My dear boy, I had never been there when I made that remark.
Miss DePink—Is that clock right?
"Doctor, what's become of that patient you had for so long?" "I had to let him die." "What for?" "He owed me so much that my only hope was his life insurance."

 Northville is experiencing about four families just now: vacant stores; vacant houses; butter and eggs. The two first named are the most sought for and are the hardest to obtain of the whole quartette.
 At the annual meeting of the Globe Furniture company recently held, J. A. Beal was elected treasurer in place of J. S. Lapham, deceased. All the other officers were re-elected.
 Not many town treasurers in this state can show the record that our own Treasurer White can do. He had $2,200 taxes to collect and got it all but $20, which he "returned." Mr. White will be a good man to re-elect.
STRAYED OR STOLEN—Feb. 14, large, fat Bull-Pug Dog. White breast, yellow legs, scars on front legs. Liberal reward if returned to Mrs. Wm. Matt at Mrs. Mary Wilkinson's, Bealton answers to the name of "Pug."
 Mrs. Ramsdell, a highly respected Meads Mills lady died Thursday night and was buried Monday. The funeral services were held at her late home, Rev. Lee McColister, Detroit, officiating. Mrs. Jewitt Cranson of this place is a daughter of the deceased.
 Last week we mentioned the contemplated building of a dozen or more new residences. This, with but two exceptions, will make no provisions for additional families, for those mentioned are already occupying homes with other people, so that their moving makes no vacancy.
 There is no more use of booming Northville in any way at present, or telling of its attractions. There is not room for another family in the village, and unless new comers bring their houses with them or build one here before they do come, they better stay where they are.
 In the opera house block there are yet two families, the RECORD office and a meat market. The prospects are they will all be obliged to vacate very soon. Where they will go is yet a mystery, at least to the tenants. Were it not so awfully cold now, we might erect a tent and camp out, you know.
 The attention of our readers is called to the ad of A. F. Huff, successor to C. W. Hullet, in another column. Mr. Huff is well and favorably known to the people of Northville and vicinity. He carries a first-class line of bakery, confectionery goods and cigars and deserves the patronage of the public which we are sure he will receive.
 The election class will give an entertainment at the W. C. T. U. hall on Wednesday evening next, to assist in the work of furnishing the hall. AFTER-GLOW.

When autumn, her bright mission worked, Has passed beyond the wide-wet hills...

THE MISADVENTURES OF JOHN NICHOLSON.

BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

Meanwhile he walked familiar streets, merry reminiscences crowding round him, sad ones also, both with the same surprising pathos.

His first visit was for Houston, who had a house on Regent's Terrace, kept for him in old days by an aunt.

"I want Mr. Houston—Mr. Alan Houston," said he.

"And who are ye?" said the voice. "This is most extraordinary," thought John, and then aloud he told his name.

"No young Mr. John?" cried the voice, with a sudden increase of Scotch accent, testifying to a friendlier feeling.

"The very same," said John. And the old butler removed his defenses, remarking only, "I thought ye were that man."

He was to pay no mere visits till he had seen his father and made all well at home.

There was the house, sure enough, but the door was of another color, and what was this—two door plates? He drew nearer.

The top one bore, with dignified simplicity, the words: "Mr. Proudfoot."

The lower one was more explicit, and informed the passerby that here was likewise the abode of "Mr. J. A. Dunlop Proudfoot, Advocate."

The Proudfoots must be rich, for no advocate could look to have much business in so remote a quarter; and John hated them for their wealth and their name, and for the sake of the house they desecrated with their presence.

He took off his hat and moved mechanically toward the stand, and there he found a small change that was a great one to him.

He moved at once, his hat still in his hand, to the door of his father's room, opened it, and entered.

Nicholson sat in the same place and posture as on that last Sunday morning; only he was older, and grayer, and sterner; and now as he glanced up and caught the eye of his son, a strange commotion and a dark flush sprang into his face.

"Father," said John, steadily, and even cheerfully, for this was a moment against which he was long ago prepared.

"Understand me," interrupted Mr. Nicholson, "you are no son of mine, and in the sight of God I wash my hands of you. One future; his first appearance in the family pew; his first visit to his uncle Greig, who thought himself so great a financier; and on whose purblind Edinburgh eyes John was to let in the dazzling daylight of the West; and the details in general of that unrivaled transformation scene, in which he was to display to all Edinburgh a portly and successful gentleman in the shoes of the derided fugitive.

The time began to draw near when his father would have returned from the office, and it would be the prodigal's cue to enter.

At the corner of Pitt street he paused to light a fresh cigar; the vest, threw as he did so a strong light upon his features, and a man of about his own age stopped at sight of it.

"I think your name must be Nicholson," said the stranger.

It was too late to avoid recognition; and, besides, as John was now actually on the way home, it hardly mattered, and he gave way to the impulse of his nature.

"Great Scott!" he cried. "Beatson!" and shook hands with warmth.

"So you're home again!" said Beatson. "Where have you been all this long time?"

"In the States," said John. "California, I've made my pile, though; and it suddenly struck me that it would be a noble scheme to come home for Christmas."

"I see," said Beatson. "Well, I hope we'll see something of you, now you're here."

"Oh, I guess so," said John, a little frozen.

"Well, ta-ta," concluded Beatson, and he shook hands again and went. This was a cruel first experience.

It was idle to blink at facts; here was John home again, and Beatson—Old Beatson—did not care a tish.

He called Old Beatson in the past that merry and affectionate lad—and their joint adventures and mishaps, the window they had broken with a catapult in India place, the escalade of the castle rock, and many another inestimable bond of friendship; and his heart surprise grew deeper.

Well, after all, it was only on a man's own family he could count. Blood was thicker than water, he remembered, and the net result of this encounter was to bring him to the doorstep of his father's house, with tenderer and softer feelings.

The night had come; the faint light over the door shone bright; the two windows of the dining room where the cloth was being laid, and the three windows of the drawing room where Maria would be waiting dinner, glowed softer through the yellow blinds.

All this time of his absence, life had gone forward with an equal foot, and the fires and the gas had been lighted, and the meals spread, at the accustomed hour.

He stepped into the lighted hall, shut the door softly behind him, and stood there fixed in wonder. No surprise of strangeness could equal the surprise of that complete familiarity.

There was the bust of Chalmers near the stair-railings, there was the clothes-brush in the accustomed place; and there, on the hat-stand, hung the hats and coats that must surely be the same as he remembered.

last thing I will tell you; one warning I will give you; all is discovered, and you are being hunted for your crimes; if you are still at large it is thanks to me, but I have done all that I mean to do; and from this time forth I would not raise one finger—not one finger—to save you from the gallows! And now," with a low voice of absolute authority and a single weighty gesture of the finger, "and now—go!"

CHAPTER VI.

The House at Murrayfield.

How John passed the evening, in what windy confusion of mind, in what squalls of anger and fits of sick collapse, in what pining of streets and plunging into public houses, it would profit little to relate.

It was not progressive, yet tended in no way to diminish; for in proportion as grief and indignation abated, fear began to take their places.

At first, his father's menacing words lay by in some safe drawer of memory, biding their hour.

At first John was all thwarted affection and blighted hope; next bludgeoned vanity raised its head again, with twenty mortal gashes; and the father was disowned even as he had disowned his son.

What was this regular course of life that John should have admired it? What were these clockwork virtues, from which love was absent? Kindness was the test; kindness the aim and soul; and judged by such a standard, the discarded prodigal—now rapidly drowning his sorrows and his reason in successive drams—was a creature of a loftier morality than his self-righteous father.

Yes, he was the better man; he felt it, glowed with the consciousness, and entering a public house at the corner of Howard place (whither he had somehow wandered) he pledged his own virtue in a glass—perhaps the fourth since his dismissal.

Of that he knew nothing; keeping no account of what he did or where he went; and in the general crashing hurry of his nerves, unconscious of the approach of intoxication.

Indeed, it is a question whether he were really growing intoxicated, or whether at first the spirits did not even sober him.

For it was even as he drained his last glass that his father's ambiguous and menacing words—popping from their hiding place in memory—started him like a hand laid upon his shoulder.

"Crimes, hunted, the gallows." They were ugly words; in the ears of an innocent man, perhaps all the uglier; for if some judicial error were in act against him, who should set a limit to its grossness or to how far it might be pushed? Not John, indeed; he was no believer in the power of innocence, his cursed experience pointing in quite other ways; and his fears, once awakened, grew with every hour and hunted him about the city streets.

It was, perhaps, nearly nine at night; he had eaten nothing since lunch, he had drunk a good deal and he was exhausted by emotion, when the thought of Houston came into his head.

He turned; not merely to the man as a friend but to his house as a place of refuge. The danger that threatened him was still so vague that he knew neither what to fear nor where he might expect it; but this much at least seemed undeniable, that a private house was safer than a public inn.

Moved by these counsels he turned at once to the Calcedonian station, passed (not without alarm) into the bright lights of the approach, redeemed his portmanteau from the cloak room, and was soon whirling in a cab along the Glasgow road.

The change of movement and position, the sight of the lamps twinkling in the rear, and the smell of damp and mould and rotten straw which clung about the vehicle, wrought in him strange alterations of lucidity and mortal giddiness.

"I have been drinking," he discovered; "I must go straight to bed and sleep." And he thanked heaven for the drowsiness which came upon him in waves.

He stepped into the lighted hall, shut the door softly behind him, and stood there fixed in wonder. No surprise of strangeness could equal the surprise of that complete familiarity.

MEXICAN SUSTENANCE.

A PALATABLE DISH FROM THE AGAVE PLANT.

Has Proven Quite a Boon to the Poor—In Summer Used as a Substitute for Cooling Things—A Southern Wonder.

That nature has given Mexico very few blessings to offset its dry, sandy soil and almost rainless climate must be conceded, but the greatest she has bestowed on the poor natives who have to get their living off the land is undoubtedly the agave, or, as it is sometimes called, maguey plant.

Three hundred and sixty-five days of never-ending sunshine are a great attraction to tourists and invalids, but to the farmer they are fatal, and Mexico is still suffering from a drought that has lasted nearly four years, says the New York Herald.

The maguey, for by that name it is generally called in Mexico, is what is commonly known as the century plant in this country. The difference is that it is the real century plant, while ours is not. In appearance it is much the same as the cactus that adorns many of our Northern gardens and piazzas in the summer, only it is larger and coarser.

The leaves frequently grow to a length of ten or twelve feet, or even more, and bear very sharp thorns. It takes the maguey about seven years to blossom. When it does bloom a stalk from ten to twenty feet tall shoots up from the center of the cluster of leaves and puts forth large flowers, which vary from a bright red color to a deep purple. Just as it is about to flower the plant has reached the proper stage for the use it is most frequently put to—the making of pulque (pronounced pool-kay).

To get the pulque the leaves and stalk are cut off a little above the ground, and the trunk formed by the joining of the roots, which is often a foot in diameter, is hollowed out. In this bowl, as it were, the sap which was intended to nourish the flower accumulates and is drawn out every day. Dipping is the commonest way of getting the sap out of the hollow, though suction pumps are sometimes used on big plantations now, and the primitive way was to draw it through a pipe with the mouth and then blow it into a handy receptacle.

After it is taken from the plant the sap must stand 24 hours to ferment, and 24 hours after the fermentation it spoils. Both French and American companies have tried time and again to find some way of preserving pulque so it could be exported, but as yet none have succeeded.

Pulque is shipped from the plantations in barrels and pigsties, and some idea of the amount of it that is drunk can be formed from the fact that forty car loads are taken to the City of Mexico alone every morning. All but a very little of this is consumed the day it is received, and what is left over spoils and is thrown away or is sold for half price as "sour pulque."

Its taste is similar to a mixture of cod liver oil and buttermilk that has gone wrong. It is the color of skim milk and "springs" like molasses, but is not so thick. But when one becomes used to it, as he does after six or seven drinks, it is not half so bad.

Pulque has very gentle but effective medicinal properties, and physicians claim that it will cure Bright's disease if taken in time. At the "captinas" it is sold in glasses of three sizes, and costs one, two and three cents a glass.

Excessive pulque drinking has a stupefying effect, and the idea that it is wildly intoxicating is all wrong. In its distilled form it is called tequila or mescal and is very fiery. This liquor is similar in appearance to gin and is violently intoxicating. It has been at the bottom of many a so-called "Greaser uprising."

The plantations on which maguey is raised for pulque making are often many acres in extent, and the plants are set in rows, like corn. After a plant has been "planted" it dies and is pulled up, a young plant being put in its place. The maguey grows best in a peculiar, sandy soil, and there are several distinct "pulque regions."

In a country where one may go hundreds of miles without seeing a rock or tree it is very convenient for fencing purposes, and is largely used that way. The fiber of its leaves makes a very tough thread or string, and sometimes coarse paper is manufactured from the roots and leaves.

The leaf of the maguey is not only edible, but makes a very fine dish when properly treated. The native Mexicans dig pits and, taking the tenderest leaves, bake them in the holes over a smoldering fire, as charcoal is roasted. When they are "just right" they are taken out, the tough outer covering, which is hardened into a shell, is peeled off, and the pith is very tender and tastes a good deal like roast corn.

The last use this cactus is put to is the most remarkable one in a climate such as Mexico, as ice never forms of itself except upon the uninhabitable tops of the highest mountains. Mexico City is supplied by ice factories, but, of course, in the rural districts ice cannot be obtained in that way.

Disappointed. Gambart, the art-dealer, sent Holman Hunt to the holy land to paint a picture similar to the "Light of the World." Hunt returned with "The Scap-goat," which so disappointed Gambart that he refused to accept it. Seeing Linnell, the painter, shortly afterward, he plaintively said: "I wanted a nice religious picture, and he bawled out a great goat." Argonaut.

Lady Customer, looking over a lot of pillows—Why weren't these marked down? Clerk, innocently—Because, ma'am, they are feathers.

"What made the jury render a verdict so quickly?" "Well, you see, one of the jurors began to tell us about the bright sayings of his five-year-old boy."

"Why do you put the choir so high up in the gallery?" "Because the bass has such a deep voice that if he was below nobody could hear him unless they sat in the cellar."

Soprano—The ventilation of this church is just awful. Alto—Isn't it though? Do you suppose that is the reason Mr. Thirdly has had such difficulty in airing his views.

"Jimmie," said mamma, "you have smashed your train of cars almost to splinters; aren't you ashamed?" "I didn't do it." "Who did?" "I don't know till I hold an inquest."

Keep Salvation Oil in the gymnasium. It is a sovereign remedy for cuts, strains, bruises and sprains, to which acrobats and athletes are liable at all times. It is the greatest cure on earth for pain, 25 cts.

Black eyes are the most rash and impetuous. Numerous unsolicited testimonials daily received by its proprietors clearly demonstrate the fact that the reputation of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, the infallible cure for all affections of the throat and chest, has suffered no diminution in the last quarter of a century.

An open mouth is a sure sign of an empty head. The Modern Way commends itself to the well-formed, to do pleasantly and affectionately what was formerly done in the crudest manner and disagreeably as well. To cleanse the system and break up colds, headaches and fevers without unpleasant after effects, use the delightful liquid laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Large ears are found on the heads of coarse people.

A Word To American Housewives.

I regard the Royal Baking Powder as the best manufactured and in the market. It is an act of simple justice and also a pleasure to recommend it unqualifiedly to American Housewives.
