A FATAL HUNT.

August Setting Accidentally Shot Sunday Afternoon.

HE LIVED ABOUT SIX HOURS.

A Comrade's Gun in the Hunt Does the Deed.

About half past one Sunday afternoon Charles Lehmon and Fred Kuntuske, living near the Phoenix mills, two miles south of here; started over into G. P. Benton's woods, near Pat Conley's, for a hunt, where they were soon after joined by August Seiting, another neighbor. It was between two and three o'clock when Seiting and Lehmon were walking side by side some six feet in advance that Kuntuske's gun lock caught on the underbrush exploding the charge. The shot took effect in the back of Seiting's right leg just below the hip, severing the main artery. Lehmon and Kuntuske bound up the wound in a way with handkerchiefs and then the later ran over to Will Meinhardt's, where he worked, and securing a rig conveyed the bleeding man to his home, the first house on the east side of the road north of the Phoenix mills. Drs. Burgess of this place and Kimmel of Plymouth were summoned and after an examination pronounced the injury fatal. They were there between five and six and after administering some narcotics for the sufferer's relief they returned home. Dr. Hatch of Plymouth was soon after summoned and arrived about 7:30 p. m., but Seiting was past all medical aid, though still partially conscious. Nearly every drop of blood must have left his body. Large quantities had flowed from the wound at the woods and during his conveyance home; and now he lay upon the couch in the kitchen almost as they had brought him in. The entire leg had been cut from his pantaloons in order to get at the injury. Great pools of blood were upon the floor, while his clothes and the quilts upon the couch, were in masses of the clotting life fluid. The wound was not an ugly one. The range was so close when the fatal shot was fired that a silver dollar would have covered the entire spot. No shot had pierced through the other side, but it mattered not, a knife cut would have accomplished the same sad result—the main artery had been torn asunder. It was only a question of a few hours and he lingered along until about nine o'clock when he passed quietly away.

Young Kuntuske is all broke up over the matter and feels very bad that it was through him his friend met his death. He is about 24 years old and has been working on the farm for Mr. Meinhardt, who have known him for years and who speak very highly of him, for some time past, and as the relations existing among them all were of the most friendly nature, the story of Kuntuske of the accident which is corroborated as far as possible by Lehmon, is not doubted in the least. Kuntuske says he was carrying his double barrel shot gun in his right hand, muzzle pointing towards the ground, when the hammer caught on the brush pulling up the end of the gun and at the same time exploding the charge.

Mr. Seiting was a hard working, industrious gentleman, fifty-one years of age and leaves a wife and two grown children, one of whom was married to Fred Vanvalkenburg of this place four or five weeks ago. The funeral occurred from the home Tuesday afternoon and the remains were interred at Plymouth.

A TOWN CLOCK NEXT.

An Unknown Philanthropist Will Present One to Northville.

The following communication which has been sent to Village-President Dubuar explains itself:

Northville, Mich., Aug. 25, 1893.
C. L. Dubuar,
Pres. of the Village of Northville,
Northville, Mich.

My Dear Sir,
I am authorized today by a gentleman whose name I am not at liberty at present to give, to say to the people of the village of Northville that he will place in the tower of the Methodist church a tower clock complete with four dials, each dial to be 5 ft. 6 in. in diameter, of ground glass 3/4 in. thick, sufficiently transparent so that the dials may be illuminated from within; in fact a complete outfit placed in the tower ready for use, and guaranteed by the manufacturer for a term of years upon the following conditions:
That the tower shall be raised sufficiently above the present bell house so that the dials can be placed properly above the bell, and that the other carpenter work which may be needed to put the clock in place shall be done at the expense of the citizens of our village, and that an appropriation shall be made by the Council for placing an electric light of sufficient power behind the dials so that they can be seen every night in the year.

I believe that the people of our village will gladly comply with the conditions which the gentleman has imposed, and that they will at once take the proper steps to avail themselves of his generous offer.
Will you kindly take such steps as you deem best to bring this matter to public notice, and have an estimate made of the expense of changing the tower as above outlined so that it may be brought before your next council meeting for their ratification, so far as it is in the scope of their power to do. Please advise me at the earliest possible moment of the result of your efforts so that I may inform you of the name of the proposed donor, and may make the order for the clock at once.

Yours truly,
F. R. BEAL.
The clock will be worth about $300 and will toll out the hours similar to the Detroit city hall clock. The church board as well as people generally throughout the village are unanimous in favor of the idea and there is no reason to doubt but what the council will act upon the matter at their next meeting Monday night. The cost of raising the tower and putting in the clock is carefully estimated to not exceed $200 and it is thought that $150 will probably do it.

This is a gift that is not often tendered to a village and the quicker the action taken, the more appreciation of the favor will be shown.

KEEP IT MOVING.

The Following Exceptionally Sound Logic is From the Adrian Press—
It is money in circulation, that makes business lively.
It is labor employed steadily, that ensures prosperity.
Don't talk hard times.
Don't pull your savings out of banks and hold it in your pocket or hide it in the house.
If you have money in the bank and want to use it, draw what you need and go ahead.
If you have a few dollars you don't need put it into the bank till you do need it.
Never, under any circumstances ask for a deposit if you do not wish to use it.
There's just as much money in the country as ever there was. Go on with your improvements, if you have the cash to pay for them. Pay all bills as fast as you contract them if you have any money about you.
Don't get into any scare over your savings. Banks, to be sound, must lend their money. It is better for depositors that they do lend it. It keeps men at work. It keeps factories running, prevents idleness, makes a demand for everything and brings prosperity.
Idle money means idle men. Idle money comes from lack of confidence. Idle men means loss of wealth. It hurts business. It hurts the farmer who supplies the food products. It hurts the workman, who must have food products.
Any person who takes a dollar out of a bank because he is frightened, helps bring on this business depression. Don't hang on to your cash. Don't oblige banks to hang on to it. Urge them to loan to farmers who want it. Or to business men who need it. Or Stand by the banks. Stand by business. Give a little credit whenever you can.

Stop groaning about hard times, and go about it to make them easier. If you have a spare dollar to put into improvements set the wage earner at work and keep the money moving. Therefore, keep money in circulation, and keep business moving right along. Keep railroads busy moving crops. Keep factories busy making goods.

Hence, all persons who have begun the study of French are warned not to trespass on her rom de plume.

The people of this country are not the only people on earth suffering from a financial pinch. In Germany, where the reichstag has but recently passed an army bill which greatly enhances the tax burden, the young emperor is put to his wife's end as to how to raise enough thalers to meet the increased expense. The long drought in the country of the Rhine has forced even the importation of hay, to say nothing of the necessary food supplies for man. The kaiser and the czar have virtually stopped commercial exchange between their respective countries so that a big market for German products is cut off.

BOMBAY is feeling what all India would be likely to feel, if English rule should be withdrawn with the difference that the relations of the combatants would probably be reversed. In Bombay the Muslims have been massacring the Mohammedans, whom they outnumber by three to one, but if the British should make room for a go-as-you-please competitive examination in arms over the whole of India the survival of the fittest would lead to a different result. Islam is the heir of the Indian empire whenever Europe takes its hands off, and if it ever comes into its inheritance the Hindus of Bombay will have cause to remember war.

THERE is no doubt that cholera has been prevailing more or less in Europe all summer. In fact, there are authentic advices from various European quarters to that effect, notwithstanding the most persistent effort, on the part of European authorities to suppress the facts. It is therefore greatly to the credit of Surgeon-General Wyman and Health Officer Jenkins, who is co-operating with him, that in spite of continual immigration from cholera infected districts the few cases of cholera in New York are essentially uncorrelated. That the plague will get a foothold in the metropolis seems now improbable and this improbability becomes more and more apparent as the season of frost advances.

A MONUMENT to the immortal Abraham Lincoln has been unveiled in the city of Edinburgh, Scotland. The plan for the same originated with Wallace Bruce, United States consul at Edinburgh, and has been carried out by American contributions. It cost $6,100. The monument is fifteen feet in height, sculptured by George E. Bissell, also an American. Mr. Lincoln is represented in bronze six feet four inches in height and in the act of emancipating a slave. His head is erect; the left arm is thrown behind, while the right is extended, holding some sheet of manuscript. The pose was made by Mr. Bissell from a photograph of Lincoln taken when he was delivering one of his speeches. At the president's feet are a freed slave and battle flags, also in bronze. The base of the monument is of polished red Aberdeen granite. This is the first Lincoln monument ever erected outside of the United States.

TALMAGE PREACHES FROM BOOK OF PSALMS.

Put Thon My Tears Into Thy Bottle. 56:8—The Tender Remembrances of a Compassionate Creator—Happiness In Tears.

BROOKLYN, Aug. 27.—Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage chose a unique theme as his subject for today, viz., "A Bottle of Tears," the text selected being Psalm 56:8. "Put thou my tears into thy bottle."

Hardly a mail has come to me for twenty years that has not contained letters saying that my sermons have comforted the writers of those letters. I have not this summer nor for twenty years spoken on the platform of any one door meeting, but coming down I have been told by hundreds of people the same thing. So I think I will keep on trying to be a "Bottle of Tears." The prayer of my text was pressed out of David's soul by innumerable calamities; but it is just as appropriate for the distressed of all ages. Within the past century, travelers and antiquarians have explored the ruins of many of the ancient cities, and from the very heart of those buried splendors of other days have been brought up evidences of customs that long ago vanished from the world. From among the tombs of those ages have been brought up lachrymatories, or lachrymatory vials, made of earthenware. It was the custom for the ancients to catch the tears that they wept over their dead in a bottle, and to place that bottle in the graves of the departed; and we have many specimens of the ancient lachrymatories, or tear-bottle, in our museums.

When on the way from the holy land our ship touched at Cyprus; we went back into the hills of that island and bought tear bottles which the natives had dug out of the ruins of the old city. There is nothing more suggestive to me than the tear-bottle, which I brought home and put among my curiosities. That was the kind of bottle that my text alludes to, when David cries, "Put thou my tears into thy bottle."

The text intimates that God has an intimate acquaintance and perpetual remembrance of all our griefs, and a vial or lachrymatory, or bottle, in which he catches and saves our tears; and I bring to you the condolence of this Christian sentiment. Why talk about grief? Alas! the world has its pang and how, while I speak, there are thick darknesses of soul that need to be lifted. There are many who are about to break under the assault of temptation, and perchance, if no words appropriate to their case be uttered, they perish. I come on no fool's errand. Put upon your wounds, no salve compounded by human quackery, but pressing straight to the mark, I hail you as a vessel mid-sea cries to a passing craft, "Ship ahoy! and bid you a rudder, and prayer for sails, and Christ for captain, and heaven for an eternal harbor. Catherine Rheinfelder, a Prussian, keeps a boat with which she rescues the drowning. When a storm comes on the coast, and other people go to their beds to rest she puts out in her boat for the relief of the distressed, and hundreds of the drowning has she brought safely to the beach. In this life-boat of the gospel I put you to-day, hoping by God's help, to bring ashore at least one soul that may be sinking in the billows of temptation and trouble. The tears that were once caught in the lachrymatories brought up from Mercurianum and Pompeii are all gone, and the bottle is as dry as the scoria of the volcano that submerged them; but not so with the bottle in which God gathers all our tears.

First, I remark that God keeps perpetually the tears of repentance. Many a man has awakened in the morning so wretched from the night's debauch that he has sobbed and wept. Pains in the head, aching in the eyes, sick at heart, and unable to step into the light. He grieves, not about his misdoing, but only about its consequences. God makes no record of such weeping. Of all the million tears that have gushed as the result of such misdeeds, not one ever got into God's bottle. They dried on the fevered cheeks, or were dashed down by the bloated hand, or fell into the red wine-cup as it came again to the lips foaming with still worse intoxication. But when a man is sorry for his past and tries to do better—when he mourns his wasted advantages and honors his rejection of God's mercy, and cries amid the lamentations of an aroused conscience for help out of his terrible predicament, then God listens; then heaven bows down; then sceptres of pardon are extended from the throne; then his crying rends the heart of heavenly compassion; then his tears are caught in God's bottle.

You know the story of Paradise and the Peri. I think it might be put to higher adaptation. An angel starts from the throne of God to find what thing it can find on the earth worthy of being carried back to heaven. It goes down through the gold and silver mines of earth, but finds nothing worthy of transportation to the celestial city. It goes down through the depths of the sea, where the pearls lie, and finds nothing worthy of taking back to heaven. But coming to the foot of a mountain it sees a wanderer weeping over his evil ways. The tears of the prodigal start, but do not fall to the ground, for the angel's wing catches them, and with that treasure speeds back to heaven. God sees the angel coming, and says, "Behold the brightest gem of earth, and the brightest jewel of heaven—the tear of a sinner's repentance."

Oh! when I see the heavenly shepherd bringing a lamb from the wilderness; when I hear the quick tread of the prodigal hastening home to find his father; when I see a sailor boy coming on the wharf and hurrying away to beg his mother's pardon for long neglect and unkindness; when I see the houseless coming to God for shelter, and the wretched and the vile, and the sin-buried, and the passion-blinded appealing for mercy to a compassionate God, I exclaim in ecstasy and triumph: "More tears for God's bottle!"

Again, God keeps a tender remembrance of all your sickness. How many of you are thoroughly sound in body? Not one out of ten! I do not exaggerate. The vast majority of the race are constant subjects of ailments. There is some one form of disease that you are particularly subject to. You have a weak side, or back, or are subject to headaches, or faintnesses, or lungs easily distressed. It would not take a very strong blow to shiver the golden bowl of life, or break the pitcher at the fountain. Many of you have kept on in life through sheer force of will. You think no one can understand your diseases. Perhaps you look strong, and it is supposed that you are a hypochondriac. They say you are nervous—as if that were nothing! God have mercy upon any man or woman that is nervous. At times you sit alone in your room. Friends do not come. You feel an indescribable loneliness in your sufferings; but God knows: God feels; God sympathizes. He counts the sleepless nights; he regards the acuteness of the pain; he estimates the hardness of the breathing. While you pour out the medicine from the bottle, and count the drops, God counts all your falling tears. As you look at the vials, filled with nauseous draughts, and at the bottles of distasteful tonic that stand on the shelves, remember that there is a larger salt than any of these, filled with no mixture by earthly apothecaries; but it is God's bottle, in which he hath gathered all our tears.

Again, God remembers all the sorrows of poverty. There is much want that never comes to inspection. The deacons of the church never see it. The controllers of almshouses never report it. It comes not to church, for it has no appropriate apparel. It makes no appeal for help, but chooses rather to suffer than to expose its bareness. It does not beg for a direct hand, but rather endures the submission to constant privation; serving women, who cannot ply the needle quick enough to earn them shelter and bread. But whether reported or uncomplaining; whether in seemingly comfortable parlors, or in damp cellars, or in hot garrets, God's angels of mercy are on the watch. This moment those griefs are being collected. Down on the back streets, in all the alleys, amid shanties and log-cabins, the work goes on. Tears of want—seething in summer's heat, and freezing in winter's cold—are all unheeded. They are jewels for heaven's casket. They are pledges of Divine sympathy. They are tears for God's bottle.

Again the Lord preserves the remembrance of all paternal anxieties. You see a man from the most infamous surroundings step out into the kingdom of God. He has heard no sermon. He has received no startling providential warning. What brought him to his new mind? This is the secret. God looked over the bottle in which he gathered the tears of his people, and he saw a paternal tear in that bottle which has been for forty years unanswered. He said, "Go to now; and let me answer that tear," and forthwith the wanderer is brought home to God. Oh, this work of training children for God! It is a tremendous work. Some people think it easy. They have never tried it. A child is placed in the arms of the young parent. It is a beautiful plying. You look into the laughing eyes. You examine the dimples in the feet. You wonder at its vigorous, elastic organism. Its beautiful plaything, but on some nightfall, as you sit looking that little one, a voice seems to fall straight from the throne of God, saying, "This child is immortal! The stars shall die, but that is an immortal! Suns shall grow old with age, but that is an immortal!"

Now I know with many of you this is the chief anxiety. You earnestly wish your children to grow uprightly, but you find it hard work to make them do as you wish. You check their noisy behavior in the night; you weariness in the midnight your pillow is wet with weeping. You have wrestled with God in agony for the salvation of your children. You ask me if all that anxiety has been ineffectual. I answer, No. God understands your heart. He understands how hard you have tried to make that daughter do right, though she is so very petulant and restless; and what pains you have bestowed in teaching that son to walk in the path of uprightness, though he has such strong propensities for dissipation. I speak a cheering word. God heard every counsel you offered him. God has known all your sleepless nights you have passed. God has seen every sinking of your distressed spirit. God remembers your prayers. He keeps eternal record of your anxieties; and in his lachrymatory, not such as stood in ancient tomb, but in one that glows and glitters beside the throne of God, he holds all these exhausting tears. The grass may be rank upon your graves, and the letters upon your tombstones defaced with the elements before the divine response will come; but he who hath declared, "I will be a God to the fatherless, and to the orphan," will not forget and some day, in heaven, while you are ranging the fields of light, the gates of pearl will swing back, and garlanded with glory, that long wayward one will rush into your outstretched arms of welcome and triumph. The hills may depart and the earth may burn, and the stars fall and time perish, but God will break his oath and trample upon his promises—never!

Again, God keeps a perpetual remembrance of all bereavements. These are the trials that cleave the soul, and throw the real parts of heaven into the stove; you may leave at the store. Misrepresentation and abuse of the world you may leave on the street where you found them. The law suit that would swallow your honest accumulations may be left in the courtroom. But bereavements are home troubles, and there is no escape from them. You will see that vacant chair. Your eye will catch at the suggestive picture. You cannot fly the presence of such ills. You go to Switzerland to get clear of them, but more sure-footed than the mule that takes you up the Alps, your troubles climb to the top, and sit shivering on the glaciers. You may cross the seas, but they can outstrip the swiftest steamer. You may take a caravan, and put out across the Arabian desert, but they follow you like a simoon, armed with suffocation. You plunge into the Mammoth cave, but they hang like stalactites from the roof of the great cavern. They stand behind with skeleton fingers to push you ahead. They stand before you to throw you back. They charge upon you with gleaming spear. They seem to come hap-hazard, scattering shots from the gun of a careless simoniac. But God is in that chamber, and they are just right; for God is the archer. This summer many of you will especially feel your grief as you go to places where once you were accompanied by those who are gone now. Your troubles will follow you to the seashore, and will keep up with the lightning express in which you speed away. Or, tarrying at home, they will sit beside you by day, and whisper over your pillow night after night. I want to assure you that you are not left alone; and that your weeping is heard in heaven. You will wander among the hills and say, "Up this hill, last year, our boy climbed with great glee, and waved his cap from the top." This is the place where our little girl put flowers in her hair, and looked up in her mother's face, until every drop of blood in your heart tingled with gladness, and you thanked God with a thrill of rapture; and you look around as much as to say, "Who dashed out that light? Who filled this cup with gall? What blast froze up these fountains of the heart?" Some of you have lost your parents within the last twelve months. Their prayers for you are ended. You take up the picture, and try to look back the way the girl put flowers in her hair, and the boy looked out from those old, wrinkled faces, and spoke in such a tremulous voice; and you say it is a good picture, but all the while you feel that, after all, it does not do justice; and you would give almost anything—you would cross the sea, you would walk the earth over—to hear just one word from those lips that a few months ago used to call you by your first name, though so long you yourself have been a parent. Now, you have done your best to hide your grief. You smile when asked, do not look like it. But though you do not look like it, God knows. He looks down upon the empty cradle, upon the desolated nursery, upon the stricken home, and upon the broken heart, and says, "This is the way I thresh the wheat; this is the way I scour my jewels! Cast thy burden on my arm and I will sustain you. All those tears I have gathered into my bottle!"

But what is the use of having so many tears in God's lachrymatory? In that great casket or vase, why does God gather all your troubles? Through all the ages of eternity, what use of a great collection of tears? I do not know that they will be kept there forever. I do not know that in some distant age of heaven an angel of God may look into the bottle and find it as empty of tears as the lachrymatory of earth; where dug up from the ancient city. Where have the tears gone to? What spirit of hell hath been invading God's palace, and hath robbed the lachrymatory? None. These were sanctified sorrows, and these tears were changed into pearls that are now set in the crowns and robes of the ransomed. I walk up to examine this heavenly casket, gleaming brighter than the sun, and cry, "From what river-depths of heaven were those gems gathered?" and a thousand voices reply, "These are transfigured tears from God's bottle." I see sceptres of light stretched down from the throne of those who on earth were trod on of men; and in every sceptre point, and in every stair of golden throne, I hold an indescribable richness and lustre, and cry, "From whence this streaming light—these flashing pearls?" and the voices of the elders before the throne, and of the martyrs under the altar, and of the hundred and forty and four thousand radiant on the glassy sea, exclaim, "Transmuted tears from God's bottle."

Let the ages of heaven roll off—the story of earth's pomp and pride long ago ended; the Koh-i-noor diamonds that make kings proud, the precious stones that adorned Persian tiara and flashed in the robes of Babylonian processions, forgotten; the Golden Mines charred in the last conflagration; but firm as the everlasting hills, and pure as the light that streams from the throne, and bright as the river that flows from the eternal rock, shall gleam, shall sparkle, shall flame for ever these transfigured tears of God's bottle.

Wax figures are slowly disappearing as advertising agencies. The cheap tailors use figures of wire with heads of plaster and paper mache, and the cheap dentists have taken in some of their horrible heads, with staring eyes and teeth that were gnashed by machinery.

Among the large shipments of bones from Mexico to the United States recently made for fertilizing and sugar-refining purposes, were ten car loads of human bones, said to have been obtained from ancient mounds in Southern Mexico, but more probably gathered from various old and abandoned cemeteries.

A manufactory of gun and tinder-box flints is still operated in England, at Brandon, on the borders of Suffolk and Norfolk, where the flint industry has been carried on, with no material change in the methods of mining and shaping the flints since the stone age. Most of the gun flints are exported to Zanzibar and other African ports and the tinder-box flints go to isolated districts in Spain and Italy.

Miss Lydia McRoberts is back from her vacation and so much improved in health that she has accepted the position of cashier in C. R. Smith's store. We don't know where Mr. Smith could have found a more competent or pleasing lady for the place.

Ralph Horton left Tuesday to test the enduring proclivities of the world's fair. He intends to take the whole of the show in and enjoy the ups and downs of the Ferris wheel. By the way, the wheel sees a good many ups and downs in the course of a day and yet its income is about $6000 every fourteen hours.

Something New in Bibles.

The Rev. H. M. Gallup of Ypsilanti is in the village this week canvassing for a new featured Oxford Bible which contains some very interesting and helpful ideas in addition to the old standard work.

Rev. Francis E. Clark D. D. of Boston, president of the Christian Endeavor society, of this book says: "I esteem it an edition of very great value. The 'Helps' are very fine, and the unique features of self-pronouncing key to hard names of the bible which so often cause young people to stumble in the scripture reading, gives it a peculiar value. I hope it will have a large sale."

These books have a number of good things to recommend them. 3w1 Address, REV. H. M. GALLUP, Ypsilanti, Mich.

"Our Men's Meeting."

Strangers—home folks—young men—we are hoping to see you at our meeting. Come over and help us.

The meeting is increasing in interest and attendance. During August we have maintained an average attendance of fifty-eight.

An ancient saying that "Nothing can hurt me but myself" is very applicable to us in these latter days. Fellows who carouse or waste their time or have no particular occupation are hurting themselves. Fellow workers in the meetings are you helping some other one to keep away from evil ways?

Next Sunday A. L. Parker, General Secretary of the Detroit Association, will address the men. Fill up the room boys, you'll not be disappointed.

"Interest more than ordinary" was the announcement on our dodger and our Sunday's meeting fulfilled that promise. The speaker was Harrison Yerkes and he spoke from words found in Galatians the sixth chapter and the seventh and eighth verses. He compared the dissolute life of Lord Byron with that of the christian life of St. Paul, concluding with Paul's "last words: 'I have fought the good fight, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness.'" The band quartette now increased to five pieces added much power to our singing.

Plymouth Races.

What Plymouth will lack in the line of a fair she will make up for in races. They will be held Sept. 7, 8, and 9. Over $1,000 will be hung up in prizes and they will be great days. The Board of Directors are determined to make this the most successful race meeting ever held in this part of the country. The track is in elegant condition; the stalls and other accommodations are second to none.

SALEM.

Ed Rider will teach on the Traverse City high school staff this winter.

The Baptist young people's social at Mr. Burrips last Friday was well attended.

Rev. D. H. Conrad and two little daughters returned on Tuesday from their week's outing at Sand Beach.

Station agent D. R. Perkins returned on Sunday from Kalamazoo, where he has been visiting relatives on his way home from the world's fair.

Dr. Roberts of Ninde M. E. church, Detroit, preached in both Methodist churches on Sabbath. His sermons were eloquent and to the point.

A party of Salemites who attended the Centennial together in 1876, will hold their annual reunion at Mrs. Hamms, about Sept. 12th.

Mrs. L. Nacker left Tuesday for Harbor Springs to visit her sister whom she has not seen for thirty-five years. She will also visit a brother during her stay.

Tomorrow (Saturday) the Ladies' Missionary society of the Cons. church will give a Missionary tea at the residence of Mrs. Geo. Wheeler. Tea served from 6 to 8 p. m.

The following letters remain unclaimed for at the postoffice: Luella Clark, Dr. Heasley, Carrie Litzemberger, Fred Slogee, Emma Youngs, Herbert W. Wheeler, H. B. Vanes.

The five Sabbath schools of this township held their union picnic in Smith's grove Wednesday. There was a big crowd present. The Salem cornet band furnished good music, and everybody enjoyed themselves.

The genial manager of the creamery, A. C. Wheeler, is still limping. He wishes those who have not yet asked him "What's the matter?" to be kindly informed that some of Job's comforters have settled on his knee.

The entertainment in the Congregational church on Thursday night was fairly well attended and greatly enjoyed, all the young people taking their parts well. The money realized will be devoted to a Christmas tree.

HOME

The prince rides up to the palace gates. And his eyes are steady as a star. For he thinks of the beaming maiden sweet. Who may never wed with him. For home is where the heart is. In dwelling great or small. And there's many a splendid palace That snovers a home at all.

children as those I have mentioned. It's no use. I am not calm. I am not reasonable. How can I be calm under the circumstances?

A Home-Made Refrigerator.

I saw a refrigerator constructed last summer at an actual outlay of so few cents, which did such good work; both in its economical use of ice and its preservation of the food placed in it, that it appears little short of a duty to describe it. Two dry goods packing cases were secured, one considerably smaller than the other. The size of the inner box will represent the capacity of the ice chest, it is to be remembered when choosing a box for this purpose, while the outer box should afford a space three or four inches all around the box to be placed within. It should also afford two inches of space between the bottom of the inner box and its own, and two inches also between the cover of the inner box and its own. All these surrounding spaces, except that above the inner box, are to be filled with dry sawdust. The interior of the inner box should be painted white, for if left in the natural wood, butter and some other articles placed in it may have a decidedly "woody" taste.

So far the ice-chest has cost but a trifle, but now it will pay to spend a little for a galvanized iron tray to fit exactly into the bottom of the inner box, provided with a tube in one end, of sufficient length to pass down through the bottom of both boxes, which will carry off all water from the melting ice. This tray can be made of tin, or even sheeting, in which case it should be well painted, both within and without, to prevent rusting. The chest mentioned did not have this tray, but it is really very desirable.

Cleats are placed upon the inside of the inner box, and shelves made of slats inserted one above another, with a chance for one such shelf directly over the ice, as it rests in one end of the box. A thick cloth cover kept well dry, over the top of the outer box will help to keep the ice from rapid melting, though without this the case mentioned the ice melted but slowly.

New Cuts in Dust Cloaks.

A dust cloak has become so indispensable that more care than usual has this year been bestowed upon planning and carrying out of this very necessary item of a woman's wardrobe. At one time there seemed to be no limit to the hideousness of dust cloaks. Shape, color and material were alike unsightly. People seemed to have insisted that it did not matter what they looked like so long as their garments were protected, just as they were of the opinion that ornament and use could not, by any possibility, be combined in a waterproof.

Nous avons change tout cela, however. In these days a mackintosh may be smart and workmanlike withal, and a dust cloak affords endless opportunities for the exercise of the milliner's art. Pretty cloaks are made of soft silk, agordon-kilted, and simply gathered into ruche of lace at the neck. Other shapes are curved and enormous armholes as to avoid crumpling the sleeves of the gown. One of the newest cloaks is composed of a light material, woven in silver-gray and red, and fastened at the throat with long gray ribbons reaching to the feet. It has a little cape with red silk, and inside the collar and under the edge of the cape runs a flame-colored silk ruche, which is revealed as it is blown back by the wind.

The Paper Wedding.

The paper wedding, which may be observed on the second anniversary of one's marriage, can now be made a very charming fete. At one not long ago the bride and guests wore dresses and flowers of paper, the house was decorated with marvelous paper flowers and the plates and napkins were of paper. The guests were requested to come without gifts, but if one wills it otherwise so many beautiful things can be fashioned out of a little crepe paper that it is no grievous tax on one's friends. Lamp shades, articles for the dressing table and table spreads are pretty gifts. Choice photographs, etchings, books and a subscription to a magazine would give a more enduring pleasure at no very great outlay.

She Understood.

Among the many stories told of the childhood of Queen Victoria is one of a visit made with her mother at Wentworth house in Yorkshire. While there the princess delighted in running about by herself in the gardens and shrubberies.

One wet morning soon after her arrival the old gardener, who did not then know her, saw her about to descend a treacherous bit of ground from the terrace and called out:

"Be careful, miss, its slaps!" a Yorkshire word for slippery.

The ever-curious princess, turning her head, asked: "What's slaps?" and at the same instant her feet flew from under her and she came down.

The old gardener ran to lift her, saying as he did so: "That's slaps, miss."

Lemon Pie.

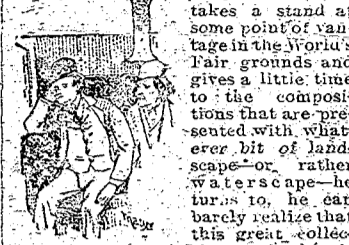

Mix one-quarter of a cup of soft cracker crumbs with one teaspoonful of melted butter; add one cup of finely chopped apples, the juice of two lemons and the rind of one. Then mix with two cups of granulated sugar, stirring until this is nearly dissolved. Beat the yolk of two eggs until light. Beat the whites to a stiff, dry froth, then mix the whites and yolks together. Stir the eggs into the other ingredients, mix well, turn into a pie plate using only an under crust, and bake for twenty-five minutes in a moderate oven.

SEEN FROM LAGOON.

THE BEAUTIFUL WHITE CITY FROM A LAUNCH.

Bits of Beauty by Land and Water at the World's Columbian Exposition—The Wonderful Transformation of a Prairie.

[World's Fair Letter.]

A VISITOR TO THE Exhibition takes a stand at some point of vantage in the World's Fair grounds and gives a little time to the compositions that are presented with whatever bit of landscape or rather water-escape he turns to, he can barely realize that this great collection of heroic structures has been erected in something like two years from a series of low lands subject to occasional flooding of swamp and morass, and overgrown here and there with stunted oaks and sedge grass. The genius that transformed this area now covered by the "White City" into wooded islands, lagoons, grand canals, erected the palatial buildings and laid out the broad piazzas beyond comprehension. But it is in moments of resting up from tramps through miles of richly lined aisles of these buildings that one commences to take in some of the effects accomplished by the men who did it and who, keeping up a liberal draft on nature's elements—sky, earth and water—proceeded to work this unattractive plot into shape for the architect and painter. It is for the reception of the superb structures which have become the delight of millions.

About the best way to get a general idea of the arrangement of the grounds (after studying up the map in your guide book and getting sufficiently pleased out to be satisfied with keeping still) is to take passage about dusk on one of the electric launches that stop at frequent intervals in the lagoon. At a journey of nearly nine miles and about three quarters of an hour long in and out, along the reedy edges of Wooded Island, the "barge-lined Grand Basin" or "grassy slopes" at the ethnological exhibits is one of the events of the visit to Chicago that will take a prominent place when recounting the pleasures of the trip. Nowhere else under heaven could such an enterprise as this one that the little voyage unfolds be undertaken, for no other country could afford to tackle the difficulties that stood in the way of accomplishing the result. The sites of former exhibitions have been in the heart of older settlements and civilization where every resource of shrubbery and vegetation has been drawn upon for the adornment of shaded park, and where natural terraces and broad levels afforded stately locations for the great buildings. The chief of the difficulties of the Jackson Park site was to convert its almost desert waste into a fitting site for the jewels that were to be inserted later, and those who made the journey referred to lingered awhile on the bridges spanning the canals or by the balustrades along the walls of the lagoons can say how well that has been overcome. The stone which the builders rejected has become the head of the corner truly; the swamp was deepened into the lagoon and that is now the feature that makes the World's Columbian Exposition unique and pre-eminent.

Now that impoverished expanse has been encouraged and developed—the existing patches of dwarf oaks fattened by the introduction of hardy shrubs, the edges of the lagoon lined with myriads of reeds, plants and these provided here and there with generous backgrounds of willows and native bright flowers—is more fully appreciated when one contemplates these magnificent buildings with their unconventional accessories. Here a bridge of superb proportions, springing apparently from a mass of foliage, spans a canal gay with bright-colored boats and picturesque boatmen, and rests its further end upon a pier crowned with some noble group of statuary. Then a broad plaza, sheltered on the nearer side by masses of luxuriant vegetation, is crossed and the porch of one of these masterpieces rears in mighty dimensions, the imposing structure itself towering above the palatial gateway.

same masters. From the recesses of the reeds and spatterdock, which vaguely mark the outlines of that haven of rest for many a footsore pilgrim who has come to Chicago to do the Fair in three days or break something, is heard the noisy gabble of a flock of geese, out on the lagoon. A fleet of ducks glides by. Beyond and above the trees the great dome of the Administration building, that monumental edifice which is virtually the porch of the Exposition, is conspicuous; when the water is quiet, the Mining building at the end of that vista, starts, seemingly, with its foundations a long way beneath the dark pavement wall and is completed in a slightly lighter effect for like distance above, while above the shrubs edging the lagoon on the right the Transportation building stretches to the end of the bay.

The Court of Honor is, of course, the Mecca of all Chicago pilgrims, and it is into this enchanted area to which the grand basin contributes its magnificent effects, that the enthusiastic Chicagoan delights to introduce the sceptical New Yorker or back number Philadelphian who may come out here to say a few words about the "tentorial." Entering at night by the west door of the Administration building and emerging on the opposite side, the stranger sees the expanse of his famous quadrangle and thanks heaven that he has the chance to do it.

It is an introduction into a new world, the like of which has never before been looked upon. Immediately in front of the visitor will be seen the great MacMonzie fountain, allegorical of the triumph of the republic, through a mist of jets its waters are spouted into the basin which holds it and thence fall into the greater basin below. On either side of this pompous work are the electric fountains, spouting their jets or cascades of every conceivable color, while beyond that is the grand basin itself, its 1,100 feet in length a distance in width outlined by rows of incandescent lamps which are repeated in the glassy surface enclosed. Towering high at the further end of the basin French's gilded statue of the Republic rises from the water and as the search light on the Manufactures building sweeps around the oblong, her huge features are brought into sharp relief and the high lights and shadows on her gilded form are accentuated by the dazzling rays. The horizon of the sky is partly outlined as in the sky beyond and with the supporting columns are mirrored in the element which plays so prominent a part in the whole scheme. It was the design of the architects to have a uniform cornice line on the buildings surrounding the basin and the device is apparent when the visitor takes in the great and almost broken line of lights that define the high lines, which are also set back from the water's edge a uniform distance of 200 feet. From the main portico of the Manufactures building, the water of the lagoon is the necessary that could not be left out any more conveniently than the gondolier with his broad, colored sash be taken from his place on the deck of his craft. The picturesque whole, which seems to be the multiple, rather than the sum of all its parts would have suffered division, not subtraction, had any other scheme been introduced. And take it all in all, I think every visitor to Chicago whose intelligence responds to the effects which abound there will be ready to assist on a modification of the "See Naples and die" remark to "See the World's Fair, and be glad you're living."

One of Dr. Holmes' Jokes.

"A few years ago," says Dr. Hale in his reminiscences of Dr. Holmes in McClure's Magazine, "in a fit of economy our famous Massachusetts Historical society screwed up its library and other offices by some fifteen feet, built in the space underneath and rented it to the city of Boston. This was all very well for the treasurer, but for those of us who had passed thirty years and had to climb up some twenty more from steps whenever we wanted to look at an old pamphlet in the library it was not so great a benefaction. When Holmes went up for the first time to see the new quarters of the society he left his card with the words, 'O. W. Holmes, High-story-calls society.'"

Rev. Josiah Strong.

Rev. Josiah Strong of New York who has just been chosen one of the vice-presidents of the American Institute of Sociology, recently organized at Chautauqua, was born at Naverille, Ohio, in 1847. He was graduated at the Western Reserve college in Ohio and studied theology at the Lane seminary. After holding congregational pastorates in Hudson, Sandusky and Cincinnati he became secretary of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States.

One Preacher's Marriage Record.

Rev. M. Vanclave, pastor of the Baptist church at Crawfordsville, Ind., has the enviable ministerial record of having married 760 couples. The venerable clergyman has preached the gospel for nearly eighty years, and the good, old-fashioned ceremony with which he ties a nuptial knot neatly and with dispatch makes the ordinal a pleasure even to the most bashful swain.

THE EDGE OF THE LAGOON.

choicest spots for appreciating how important a feature the water effect is in the whole architectural scheme. At the far end of that charming vista one sees reflected amid the soft gray shadows of the Liberal Arts building, wavy lines of white, indications of the columns supporting the roof of the west porch, and in the same element to the right are roughly duplicated the grand front of Electricity and Mining buildings. Masses of shadow in the foreground on the right and left, reproductions of trees and aquatic plants that mark the edges of the walks of Wooded Island, form another note in the harmony, while an Italian fishing boat, with gaudily painted sails, floating lazily at its moorings, adds its bit of color to the scene.

The chief of the difficulties of the Jackson Park site was to convert its almost desert waste into a fitting site for the jewels that were to be inserted later, and those who made the journey referred to lingered awhile on the bridges spanning the canals or by the balustrades along the walls of the lagoons can say how well that has been overcome. The stone which the builders rejected has become the head of the corner truly; the swamp was deepened into the lagoon and that is now the feature that makes the World's Columbian Exposition unique and pre-eminent.

Now that impoverished expanse has been encouraged and developed—the existing patches of dwarf oaks fattened by the introduction of hardy shrubs, the edges of the lagoon lined with myriads of reeds, plants and these provided here and there with generous backgrounds of willows and native bright flowers—is more fully appreciated when one contemplates these magnificent buildings with their unconventional accessories. Here a bridge of superb proportions, springing apparently from a mass of foliage, spans a canal gay with bright-colored boats and picturesque boatmen, and rests its further end upon a pier crowned with some noble group of statuary. Then a broad plaza, sheltered on the nearer side by masses of luxuriant vegetation, is crossed and the porch of one of these masterpieces rears in mighty dimensions, the imposing structure itself towering above the palatial gateway.

same masters. From the recesses of the reeds and spatterdock, which vaguely mark the outlines of that haven of rest for many a footsore pilgrim who has come to Chicago to do the Fair in three days or break something, is heard the noisy gabble of a flock of geese, out on the lagoon. A fleet of ducks glides by. Beyond and above the trees the great dome of the Administration building, that monumental edifice which is virtually the porch of the Exposition, is conspicuous; when the water is quiet, the Mining building at the end of that vista, starts, seemingly, with its foundations a long way beneath the dark pavement wall and is completed in a slightly lighter effect for like distance above, while above the shrubs edging the lagoon on the right the Transportation building stretches to the end of the bay.

The Court of Honor is, of course, the Mecca of all Chicago pilgrims, and it is into this enchanted area to which the grand basin contributes its magnificent effects, that the enthusiastic Chicagoan delights to introduce the sceptical New Yorker or back number Philadelphian who may come out here to say a few words about the "tentorial." Entering at night by the west door of the Administration building and emerging on the opposite side, the stranger sees the expanse of his famous quadrangle and thanks heaven that he has the chance to do it.

It is an introduction into a new world, the like of which has never before been looked upon. Immediately in front of the visitor will be seen the great MacMonzie fountain, allegorical of the triumph of the republic, through a mist of jets its waters are spouted into the basin which holds it and thence fall into the greater basin below. On either side of this pompous work are the electric fountains, spouting their jets or cascades of every conceivable color, while beyond that is the grand basin itself, its 1,100 feet in length a distance in width outlined by rows of incandescent lamps which are repeated in the glassy surface enclosed. Towering high at the further end of the basin French's gilded statue of the Republic rises from the water and as the search light on the Manufactures building sweeps around the oblong, her huge features are brought into sharp relief and the high lights and shadows on her gilded form are accentuated by the dazzling rays. The horizon of the sky is partly outlined as in the sky beyond and with the supporting columns are mirrored in the element which plays so prominent a part in the whole scheme. It was the design of the architects to have a uniform cornice line on the buildings surrounding the basin and the device is apparent when the visitor takes in the great and almost broken line of lights that define the high lines, which are also set back from the water's edge a uniform distance of 200 feet. From the main portico of the Manufactures building, the water of the lagoon is the necessary that could not be left out any more conveniently than the gondolier with his broad, colored sash be taken from his place on the deck of his craft. The picturesque whole, which seems to be the multiple, rather than the sum of all its parts would have suffered division, not subtraction, had any other scheme been introduced. And take it all in all, I think every visitor to Chicago whose intelligence responds to the effects which abound there will be ready to assist on a modification of the "See Naples and die" remark to "See the World's Fair, and be glad you're living."

One of Dr. Holmes' Jokes.

"A few years ago," says Dr. Hale in his reminiscences of Dr. Holmes in McClure's Magazine, "in a fit of economy our famous Massachusetts Historical society screwed up its library and other offices by some fifteen feet, built in the space underneath and rented it to the city of Boston. This was all very well for the treasurer, but for those of us who had passed thirty years and had to climb up some twenty more from steps whenever we wanted to look at an old pamphlet in the library it was not so great a benefaction. When Holmes went up for the first time to see the new quarters of the society he left his card with the words, 'O. W. Holmes, High-story-calls society.'"

Sixty-five Bushels Per Acre. This remarkable yield was reported to the John A. Salzer Seed company, La Crosse, Wis., by Frank Floss of Iowa, on a field of Salzer's World's Fair Winter Wheat. Speaking of wheat, this new variety takes the cake. Several farmers who tried it during 1893 believe they can raise 100 bushels per acre. His northern-grown wheat sorts, as also his grass mixtures, can be sown with success as late as Nov. 10. Salzer will send free a package of World's Fair Winter Wheat and his fall oat variety if you will cut this one and send me to John A. Salzer Seed company, La Crosse, Wis.

What a Noted Physician Thinks of Swamp-Root.

"GREATEST REMEDY OF THE CENTURY." An Effective Cure for all Kidney, Liver and Bladder Diseases.

C. F. Brown, A. M., M. D.

"When I discovered that Swamp-Root was not a patent medicine, but the favorite prescription of an old and scientific physician with which he had treated successfully thousands of cases, my prejudices were disarmed and I began to prescribe Swamp-Root in my practice invariably with the most surprising results, curing many cases which I had considered hopeless. Whenever I find any one suffering with pain in the small of the back, a too copious flow or retention of urine indicating Kidney or Bladder disease, I invariably prescribe Swamp-Root, and it never fails to greatly benefit the patient, even in cases of Bright's Disease. I have also used it in repeated cases of chronic diarrhea which

It has never failed to cure after all other remedies had proved useless. For all Kidney, Bladder or Liver diseases I consider Swamp-Root a perfect specific, and the greatest remedy of this century."
